

It was 50 years ago this month that the Class of 1934 said good-bye to the hallowed halls of Belleville High School, and members of that graduating class didn't let something like five decades get in the way of marking the milestone. See story on Page A-2.

It's final Temporary fireworks stands banned by court

By STEVE O'LEARY

There will be no fireworks sold from temporary stands in Romulus this year, according to a ruling issued Friday by Judge Robert Columbo Jr. in Wayne County Circuit Court.

"We didn't even have anyone testify. We didn't get that far. Judge Columbo heard their arguments and then ruled in our favor."

A new ordinance introduced earlier this year by the city council banned temporary stands from selling fireworks, which they claimed had been a major problem in the past. But two local businessmen, Donald Kehn and Donald Lynn, took the matter to the courts and last week received a seven-day restraining order, allowing them exemption from the ordinance until Friday, when they were to introduce evidence showing why the temporary stands are no less safe than permanent ones which sell fireworks.

According to Romulus legal counsel Ronald Mack, the Friday hearing slammed the door shut on what councilman Barry Baumann termed "eyesores to the community — temporary fireworks stands."

"We didn't even have anyone testify. We didn't get that far," said Mack, "because Judge Columbo heard their arguments, including an 'expert witness' they brought in, and then ruled in our favor. He denied them without our calling one single person."

As the newspaper was going to press, it was revealed that the case will be back in court Friday, as one of the parties had filed for a rehearing. When contacted, Donald Kehn stated that "It must be Lynn. I just now heard that we'll be back Friday, but I'm still fuzzy as to why."

Usually, when a judge says that's it, then that's it," said Kehn.

Kehn and Lynn had called former Romulus Fire Chief/Fire Inspector John Wilhide as an expert witness. Wilhide testified that a fire at a temporary stand would be much easier to handle than a fire in a permanent structure. Columbo was not moved.

"I've certainly observed a difference in our city from previous years."

Approximately $500 worth of illegal fireworks were confiscated by the Romulus Police Department last Wednesday after a plainclothes officer bought some skyrockets with marked money while detectives looked on.

Mayor Beverly McAnally, who was in attendance at the Friday hearing, commented that she has "certainly observed a difference in our city from previous years. There seem to be far fewer firecrackers and rockets going off, both from what I've noticed and what citizens have remarked to me, and I can't help but think it's because fewer illegal fireworks have been sold in Romulus this year."

Open less than 1 hour, fireworks shop raided

By STEVE O'LEARY
ANP Staff Writer

Less than one hour after receiving their license to sell class C fireworks at 4 p.m. Wednesday, a stand located at 30925 Ecorse Road was visited by Romulus police and detectives, who confiscated approximately $500 worth of illegal fireworks after some were sold to a plainclothes officer who used marked bills in the transaction. The shop is in a permanent structure.

In addition, the owner of the license, Michael Ray, of Canton, was given two citations: one for selling illegal fireworks, and another for allowing a minor to sell them.

Unlike some stands in the past that kept illegal fireworks in a back room or under the counter, police were aware that at this particular stand, they were stored in the trunk of a 1972 brown Chevrolet parked on the side of the store.

According to Detectives Sam Chalton and David Early, when Ray was asked if he had "anything better" than what was on display, his 15-year-old helper would go out to the car and get what was asked for or, in instances where the buyer didn't know what he wanted, he went with the minor to the car and picked out whatever illegal fireworks were there.

Reportedly, with the illegal sales, all money transactions were with the minor and outside the building, seemingly meant to keep the shopkeeper from legal blame.

The use of marked bills, however, which were recovered in the cash register inside the shop, foiled that strategy.

"When we went into the shop, Ray kept saying 'I didn't sell them,' which he didn't, but the bills were recovered in his cash box, so it didn't matter," said Det. Sgt. Sam Chalton. "We also confiscated the automobile," he added, "but that will be returned as soon as towing fees are paid."

Det. Sgt. David Early said that "at first Ray claimed the car was his, but then he said it belonged to his father's girlfriend." A lien check showed the auto was registered to Linda Lorraine Bolden of Carleton.

According to one source, Ray was "set up and supplied" at his stand by a man who had originally been turned down in his application for the license because of prior police convictions.

One former Romulus police officer also purchased illegal fireworks at the stand earlier Wednesday, before the stand could lawfully sell even legal fireworks because their license had not gone through yet. Early says that "all of the fireworks bought and confiscated by the department will be destroyed."

The stand remained open Thursday because, as Chalton said, "they can only have their license taken away by the city council, and then only after the convictions, if and when they come."

"It'll probably be well past the season before that happens, because of the trouble getting court dates," he added.

Ray was scheduled to be arraigned at 9 a.m. Tuesday, June 26. He will face a maximum charge of $500 and/or 90 days in jail for each citation. Police also indicated that additional charges may be added.

Supreme Court ruling angers 21st District candidates

By EVE SILBERMAN
ANP Staff Writer

Local candidates for the 21st State REpresentative seat are united in their anger over last week's ruling by the Michigan Supreme Court, which invalidated the June 5 special primary.

The primary was to have determined Democratic and Republican candidates for the seat vacated by the death of Rep. Richard Sullivan, D-New Boston.

Democratic nominee Lynn Owen, London Township supervisor, and Republican nominee Roy Raker, a Huron Township farmer, expressed irritation and disbelief at the turn of events.

"The legislature just plays games," Raker said. "It's got to stop."

"It's no wonder there's so much voter apathy," said Owen.

He added, "I've just got to get out and file all over again."

Office seekers are in the dark as to when — or if — another special election primary will be set. The special election was to have determined who would serve the remainder of Sullivan's term, which expires at the end of the year.

Governor James Blanchard has the option to set a new special election date. A spokesman for the governor said last Friday that no decision had been reached on the question. "We haven't really talked about it," the spokesman said.

Candidates for the 21st district — whose boundaries were altered by the Supreme Court ruling — are concentrating on the Aug. 7 primary. Primary winners will face off in the Nov. 6 general election.

If no special election is called, Sullivan's seat will remain unfilled led until the new legislative term.

The Supreme Court ruled on June 19 that a state reapportionment plan (approved by the State Legislature in December) was in violation of the state constitution. The Court's ruling means that Michigan must return to its 1982 apportionment plan.

The 21st District is not greatly altered by the ruling. The new plan means that two townships in Lenawee County (Ridgeway and Deerfield) are out of the district, and French Town Township is in. The part of Milan in Washtenaw County also is dropped.

The new plan does, though, place Milan Mayor Ronald Weber out of the running for this district.

Under another ruling by the State Supreme Court, candidates for the November House elections must file by June 27.

The Supreme Court decision gave the legislature until July 10 to develop a new reapportionment plan, but officials from the Wayne County Election Clerk's office said it was "extremely unlikely" the legislature could come to an agreement in that short a time period.

"Look how long it's taken them to get something done when they had the time," said an elections official.

Sumpter Township Supervisor Jim Reeves, a Democratic contender for the 21st seat, said that he "wasn't surprised" by the special election fiasco.

"I felt all along something like this might happen," Reeves said. "I don't know why the Attorney General waited so long to call the special election to begin with," he added, pointing out that Sullivan had died in February.

Reeves took slight comfort in the fact that scrapping the special primary results gave him chance to improve his poor fourth place showing (out of five Democratic candidates).

"I'll just have to campaign harder and spend less money," he said.

Reeves added that his finances were low and that he didn't want to accept donations from "special interest" groups.

Huron Township Clerk Mary Lou Carey could squeeze no satisfaction out of the Court's ruling. Carey — who had dropped out of the 21st district race after finishing second to Owen — found she couldn't do an about-face and re-declare her candidacy.

The reason is that Carey filed for re-election as Township Clerk, and the date to withdraw her candidacy for clerk has passed. After consulting with officials from the Secretary of State's Office, Carey found she couldn't withdraw from the clerk's race despite the unusual circumstances.

State law prohibits candidates from seeking two offices.

While Carey described herself as "uncertain" about exchanging her local job for the state seat, she was, nonetheless, angry over the prohibitive circumstances.

"I'm boiling," said Carey Thursday afternoon.

"This is another irresponsible act of the State Legislature, creating new boundaries to hold on to their seats of power. We need some new representation in Lansing."

Other candidates in the June 5 primary include Democrat Frederock Kurtcyz, and Republican Joe Costello. Kurtcyz, a Detroit teacher who finished last in the Democratic primary, withdrew from the race.

50 years later

Class of '34 marks milestone

Sixteen members of the Class of 1934 of Belleville High School met for a "joyous" 50th Class reunion, on June 3.

At 10:30 a.m., that day 21 members of the group attended worship service at the United Methodist Church, of Belleville. The pastor, Rev. George Spencer, acknowledged the group, and the congregation welcomed them warmly.

The group attended the coffee hour, following the worship service, which honored the Belleville High School graduates of 1984.

The 50-year graduates then adjourned to the Tin Lizzie Restaurant of Belleville for a short social hour and dinner.

Following dinner, a program was presented, with Vira (Petraska) McGrane, as toastmistress. Jokes and social news from the Orange and Black school papers of 1933-34, were given.

The class song, which was composed by Deal Fischer, was read. The lyrics were written by class member, Pauline (Schweigert) Wilkerson.

A memorial service for five deceased classmates, was given by Mildred Artley. Several "gag" prizes were given: for the couple married the longest; the couple who travelled the farthest; the couple with the first great-grandchild; the couple with the youngest son or daughter to name a few.

Many pieces of memorabilia were on display to recall the youthful years of 1934. The class flower, the white rose, were used to decorate the dinner tables and name tags.

The class motto, "Before Us Lies The Timber, Let Us Build," was magnified, on a large poster, with an added line — "How many splinters have you gathered?"

Three former teachers were present, and honored — Ellen Gould, Olga Yanke James and Merle Touse.

The classmates of 1934, are Eula (Ames) Haft, Mildred Artley, Charles Arminski, M.D., Marie Binger, Betty (Bird) Parkinson, Dorothy (Chizmar) Ticknor, Edith (Clark) Steinman, Harold Clayton, Cyril Corkins, Alice (Engstrom) Linder, Nina (Felder) Murphy, Deal Fischer, Dorothy (Gohl) Dittmar, Hilda (Gumtow) Krause, Ralph Herkimer, Glenn Miller, Vira (Petraska) McGrane, Marian (Renton) Whichello, Harold Rubel, Robert Schaal, Pauline (Schweigert) Wilkerson, Donald Thurston, Mary (Tkachuk) Harris, Mark Todd, M.D., William Whichello, Dorothy (Wilson) Vedder, Jeanette (Wojcicki) Krause and Ernest (Wykowski) Wyman.

1984 update

Wayne County General gets new lease on life

Wayne County General Hospital has gotten a new lease on life with the approval Monday by the Wayne County Board of Commissioners of a lease-purchase agreement for the Westland facility.

The commissioners voted 12-3 to approve the agreement with Southwest General Hospital. The vote came just four days after County Executive William Lucas announced the 10-year agreement.

The commission's approval staves off the layoff of 600 county employees, which would have taken effect July 9. Lucas had announced the layoffs after a move to close the hospital on May 31 was halted by a court injunction, obtained by a group of doctors at the hospital and members of the Board of Commissioners.

Southwest General would assume operation of Wayne County General at 11:59 p.m. Aug. 1, if it is able to work out needed wage concessions and staff reductions at the facility.

Southwest has agreed to a non-refundable downpayment of $50,000, which would be applied to the purchase price of $15 million. It will pay the county $500,000 the first five years of the 10-year agreement, with the option to purchase the hospital during any of those five years. In the remaining five years of the agreement it will pay $600,000, with the purchase price increasing by 5 percent per year during years 6 through 10.

In addition, Southwest has agreed to pay Wayne County an annual amount equal to one-third of the excess revenues and to purchase the hospital's inventories, as recorded as of July 25. The latter payment would be delayed until the such time as Southwest exercises its option to buy. If the option were not exercised, or the property returned to Wayne County, or the lease were to expire, Southwest would still be required to pay the purchase price of the inventory.

Southwest also has an option to purchase the Health Center Building, situated behind the general hospital and its immediate grounds for $1 million during the first five years of the lease, with the price to jump 5 percent per year the remaining five years of the agreement, as well as the floodplain south of the building and north of the Rouge River for a price to be set by a mutually acceptable appraiser.

Wayne County has agreed to a $4 million cap on care for indigent persons at the hospital during the 10-year lease, with the credit for uncompensated care to be $1 million for the first two years of the agreement and the remaining $2 million to be spread out in equal amounts over the remaining eight years.

Southwest has agreed to submit to the county by July 10 a table of organization for its proposed operation of the hospital, which will not be able to have either Wayne or County in its name once the agreement takes effect.

It also has agreed to offer full-time employment to county employees of record as of July 15, except for those whose early retirement has been delayed or who are employed for maintenance or operation of the Eloise Complex and the power plant.

Since Wayne County General is being leased as a "going concern," Southwest also has agreed that there will not be an interruption of services or shutdown of the hospital.

Lucas lauded the commissioners' decision to approve the agreement, noting that "it will keep the hospital open, give employees a chance to retain employment at the hospital and remove a $50,000 a day burden off county taxpayers."

"For more than 50 years, the leaders of this county have debated the fate of Wayne County General Hospital," he noted. "(This is) a sensible solution that does not bankrupt Wayne County taxpayers and does not jeopardize patients and employees ... (It is) a realistic, efficient and humane solution to this problem."

The agreement hinges on wage concessions by employees, and indications Monday from the hospital's largest employee union, AFSCME, was that neither the concessions nor staff reductions were acceptable to its membership. Southwest has an Aug. 15 deadline to hammer out that agreement.

Up in smoke

A man driving eastbound on Ecorse Road June 17 had a rather rude surprise when his car began smoking. He pulled onto the soft shoulder and went to phone the Romulus Fire Department, and when he returned, he found his car completely destroyed by fire, despite the efforts of the firemen who were on the scene quickly. Reportedly, a friend in Romulus had just finished working on the sports car's carburetor. "I think he should ask for a refund," quipped an officer on the scene.

Post Office

On June 14, there was a special meeting of the city council to award the bid for the land that will hold the soon-to-be-built Romulus Post Office. Unfortunately, only two of the councilpersons showed up: Barry Baumann and Mayor Pro-Tem Mary Ann Banks. A minimum of four is needed to make a quorum, which could have awarded the bid.

"As far as I know, only (councilman) Junior Block had a legitimate excuse for not being there," said a rather unhappy Baumann. "I think it's a darn shame that after all the effort that was put into this thing to hurry it through no one else even bothered to show up. It's disgusting." The bid was finally awarded at last night's regular meeting of the council.

The long-awaited groundbreaking ceremony for the new Romulus Post Office will be taking place at 11 a.m. on Friday, July 6.

The public is invited, and will be joined by, among others, Congressman Bill Ford, Detroit Postmaster Gene Cole, Bill Simonds of the Romulus Central Business District and Mayor Beverly McAnally as well as other Romulus elected officials.

The post office will be built on the site of the old foundry on Goddard Road.

New hotel

Romulus may be getting yet another new hotel/motel. The Marcus Corporation has expressed interest in building a large motel on Wickham Road. Due to termed "time restraints," the public hearings for the establishment of a Commercial Redevelopment District will not be advertised in these pages, but rather in "one of the Detroit newspapers." Meetings are tentatively scheduled for July 2 and July 9. Those interested should contact city hall for further information.

Join the parade

The Fourth of July Parade Committee is hard at work preparing for this year's event. The parade will be held on Wednesday, July 4, beginning at City Hall at 11 a.m.

It's not too late to enter your group in the parade or to enter yourself as an individual.

If interested, contact Kathy McCallum at 326-6440 or Gayle Mach at 941-0666, ext. 254.

Support offered

Michigan's new program under Public Act 249 of 1983 to financially support families with severely handicapped children living at home begins July 1st with applications being accepted by the Detroit - Wayne County Community Mental Health (CMH) Board any time after that date announced James P. Curran, MSW, Director.

Applications and instructions for the Family Support Subsidy Program (FSSP) may be obtained from and submitted to the Detroit-Wayne County CMH Board, 10th floor, Book Bldg., downtown Detroit.

Families eligible for FSSP must have a child under age 18, living at home, who has been certified by their local school district under one of three circumstances: severely mentally impaired, severely multiply impaired or autistic impaired. The total family income cannot exceed $60,000.

"This landmark program will assist families of children with severe disabilities to stay together, allow them to purchase special services locally, and save the Wayne County taxpayers the expense of inpatient care," commented Highland Park Mayor, Robert Blackwell, CMH Board chairman.

Paris M. Finner, Ph.D., Coordinator, Developmental Disabilities, explained that each family is eligible for $225 per month per handicapped child up to the age of 18 years.

She urged parents to contact the CMH Board with a written request for the application form and instructions or by phoning 224-5632. The forms will be available after Monday, July 2, and mailed upon request. Coverage in the program will begin for the calendar month following the month of application.

Barbados

Barbados ... no doubt few in western Wayne County are experts on this tiny Caribbean island. It is a fascinating study in social change, or the lack of it.

How would I know, you ask? Well, thanks to the Barbados tourist board, Eastern Airlines and Hilton International Hotels, I had the opportunity to visit "Beautiful Barbados" two weeks ago with a group of travel writers.

The natives of Barbados were slaves just six generations ago, working the plantations which produce sugar cane, the main export commodity of the island. They have been "free" for some time now, but until recently had nowhere to go.

They still worked on the plantations under the direction of the owners and had no influence in government or economic decisions. Plantation owners were the legislators and decision makers — you had to own land to hold political office.

The native populus lived, as many still do, in wooden "chattel" houses. They were never allowed to build any type of permanent home and could not work on one plantation and live on another. Therefore, when they changed "jobs" they changed the location of their homes as well by taking it down in pieces and transporting it to the new plantation.

Many of these chattel houses still exist, and in nearly the same condition as they were in the time they were built, as much as 200 years ago. Delapidated, run down and in need of repair, they house some of the happiest people I've yet encountered.

Today, these people are allowed to own land, build homes on that land that are permanent and are now taking their rightful place in the government of this constitutional monarchy.

So why should you care? Because, like so many other developing countries, we should all be aware of the influence and the role we as Americans play in changing the world.

Barbados, a British protectorate for hundreds of years, only began to emerge socially in a significant way when tourism in the 1950s, was recognized as being of significant importance to the economic well being of the island.

Unlike islands of the Caribbean like Jamaica, the people of Barbados seem genuinely pleased to see American tourists, and anxious to make their stay pleasurable. They are, I repeat happy. They smile, they laugh ... they see you on the street or in a car and they greet you with a wave and a happy salutation. And they don't ask for money in return for directions or information.

There was no doubt that our group had been invited to the paradise in the hope that we would return speaking well of this tropical oasis that is the most easterly of the group of islands that stretches in an arc from Florida to the northern part of South America.

No one can help but be impressed with the climate, the warm, friendly people and the many unique tourist attractions Barbados has to offer.

As one might expect, the island remains a study in sharp contrasts. The wealthy come to play behind stone walls, not far from the chattel houses and the native rum shops (neighborhood pub, on a small scale). They frolic expensively at the polo club (very, very exclusive and oh, so British, my dear) far removed from the tourist beats. The palatial home of Claudette Colbert, which was recently visited by President and Mrs. Reagan, can be found but not seen (very high, thick walls). Remember the now infamous picture of the President frolicking in the surf with his bare chest exposed? You got it, taken right on the Barbados shore. Frank Sinatra and friends come each year to play in this ideal climate — and Sinatra, too, maintains a year-round home in this ideal climate that stays at 80 degrees 12 months of the year, without humidity.

Other than Bagin (that's Baa-gin) which is Barbados street talk, the only language spoken is very proper english.

Located 2,000 miles south of New York, 1611 miles from Miami, 4,195 miles from London, this emerging pearl, with people who attempt to emulate us in many ways, has become and will continue to be of importance to America.

Last October, it was the staging area for American troops which launched the assault on Grenada, located just 150 miles away. The support for that move is apparent on the island. For had President Reagan not taken action in concert with the governments of the region, social and economic instability would have destroyed what the loyal friends of this country in the Caribbean are trying to build.

All that exists, and has happened is not ideal. But, rising family incomes, improved literacy rates, the modern Grantley Adams International Airport, the deep-water harbour at Bridgetown that has opened the island to cruise ships, the attractive shopping districts, improved roads and the multitude of resort beaches and hotels speak well for the future of the tropic paradise getaway.

So easterly that Columbus missed it, so flat that you have to know exactly where you are going to find it, Barbados is a fun, exciting and entertaining island, worth the trip.

George Washington and England's Prince Andrew are among those who have partaken of the sun and surf here. Washington, reportedly in his only visit out of the United States, toured the Fort where now stands the beautiful Hilton, which has preserved as much of the history of the site as possible. And young Andrew often, we are told, comes calling at the home of Lord Snowden's uncle, as does Princess Margaret.

Obviously, they know a good thing when they see it.

Fireworks and tragedy

Independence Day will be a time of celebration and fun for most. But for the few who do not recognize the danger involved with fireworks, Independence Day will be a time of pain.

Fireworks, despite their patriotic association, present a very serious safety hazard, particularly for children. Deaths, blindings, amputations and severe burns have been all too often the result of the use of fireworks.

According to Consumer Product Safety Commission estimates, 8,300 people were treated last year in hospital emergency rooms for fireworks-related injuries. More than half the injuries were burns and many involved the head and face. Forty-five percent of the victims were under 15 years of age and 73 percent were under 25.

Despite the warnings of local fire officials, persons continue to disregard the facts and add fireworks to their holiday celebration. The tragedy is that spectators generally are the victims. Six of every 10 persons injured are on-lookers or are unaware that anyone is handling fireworks nearby, according to the National Fire Protection Association.

Wayne fire officials note that sparklers can reach 2,000 degrees, enough to ignite objects and severely burn people. Small particles can fly off and cause permanent blindness.

In Wayne, the fire prevention code prohibits the sale of all fireworks, including sparklers. Violation of the code is a misdemeanor and carries a potential fine of $500 or up to 90 days in jail or both.

Information on code restrictions can be obtained by contacting local fire officials.

We advise persons to let the experts handle the fireworks. As a spectator one can enjoy the displays and sound effects in a safe environment. And Independence Day will remain a symbolic, yet safe, observance.

Last Friday, the City of Romulus won a court battle which will ban temporary stands from selling fireworks; fireworks will still be sold, but only in permanent buildings. The purpose of fighting to uphold the new fireworks ordinance is, according to the city council, to clean up the image of the city.

But if that is a sincere wish, it seems the council is going about it all wrong. Sources at area police departments are adamant that fireworks stands — temporary or permanent — cannot be profitable selling only legal fireworks, such as sparklers and "snakes."

Commonly seen amusements like bottle rockets and simple firecrackers are against the law to sell or set off. They are imported from other states and sold at inflated prices from a back room or literally under the counter.

This will still go on, even if a few temporary stands are gone. It is difficult to police stands which sell "legal" fireworks, because one must fool the operator into believing he isn't an undercover policeman. Faces become known as fines are paid.

If the Romulus administration is serious about ridding the city of illegal fireworks which may harm youngsters along with tarnishing the image of the community, they should have drawn up an ordinance banning ALL fireworks.

You're either going to have them or not have them. Right now, Romulus has them.

Why didn't they vote?

To the Editor:

The millage defeat for Van Buren Schools Monday, June 11th may not have surprised some, but I must admit it baffled me.

For those who worked the past several weeks meeting with voters and working for its passage, it is a disappointment, a discouragement in face of some optimism.

School officials are justifiably upset with the outcome of the election and the options that they face in order to upgrade our schools. Without additional millage, our school district can not implement physical education, art and music for our elementary schools and a six-hour day for our seventh through 12th grades. The above statement means over two additional years of education for our students from K through 12.

I can't understand the 17 percent voter turnout Monday. Although study figures of voting records will determine just who did not vote, I am sure history has repeated itself and many parents of school students did not vote. For what reasons parents do not vote I can not understand, certainly they must have concern for their child's education.

For those who voted no for this millage increase, I have trouble understanding their reasoning. The schools are your community. I wonder who paid for their education? I don't wish to blame any age group, economic group or generalize category of voters, but I do wonder what their reasoning is for voting no.

For the past year there have been many who have called for stricter educational standards and for stricter teacher licensing. All of this has resulted from the perceived decline in educational standards.

Monday was a sad day for our children in the Van Buren schools, and an even sadder day for the 83 percent of the district voters who did not vote. I wonder if the school district's residents would allow a 17 percent minority to make all of their future decisions for them?

I have read various articles in this space written by Morton A. Potter over the last few years. The most recent one took Brooks Patterson to task for advocating the death penalty. However, Mr. Potter supported a candidate for governor who advocated abortion.

I just wonder how he can be for the death penalty in one case and against it in the other.

We wish to publicly thank Mr. John Crova of Crova Sales for his participation in Project Graduation at Romulus Senior High School. Mr. Crova displayed a wrecked car at the high school as a reminder to the students of the tragic consequences of drinking and driving.

Mr. Crova has helped make this a safer prom and graduation season for our students. Our sincere thanks and appreciation.

A close encounter of the F1 kind

Graphite fiber ... Doesn't that have something to do with lead pencils?
Turbo-charged ... Isn't that going through Sears Roebuck on a fast rush, charge card in hand?
Coke bottle-shaped ... Yeah, I've had one or two when I couldn't find a Pepsi.
11½ thousand revolutions ... That's indigenous to South America and indicative of a rapid change in governments.
No?
Definitely not so.

For the person who thinks Formula 1 is the secret herbs and spices of Kentucky Fried Chicken, those terms are as foreign as foreign can be. Not so for the racing aficionadoes, they're a meager description of the McLaren international racing team's entries in the Detroit Grand Prix III this past weekend.

The roar of engines and the smell of grease have never been much of a lure for me, and I most admit my knowledge of cars goes no further than how to change the air conditioning fuse and checking the oil. But the lure of the Detroit Grand Prix caught up with me this year enough to stumble into a press conference by McLaren, with Nikki Lauda, second in the world Formula 1 racing circuit as the star.

My notebook has five pages worth of information of the McLaren turbo-charged entries, everything from its graphite composite chassis provided by the Aerospace Division of Hercules Inc., to an automated power plant design to McLaren's specifications by Porsche, to the engine's 11,500 revolutions for optimum performance.

Dull stuff, huh? Not really, when you consider McLaren's team of Alain Prost of France and Lauda of Austria are No. 1 and 2 on the world racing circuit this year and were looking for the nine points of a victory in Detroit to pad their lead.

Consider this. The engine — all 1500 cc's worth — has its own computer which monitors the engine's various functions and makes adjustments to optimize performance. (Optimize is a big word turbo-charged car. The design probably has had more wind tunnel time than any other on the circuit and it was the "positive finds in aerodynamics" that has helped McLaren come up with less drag on the car in the straight aways.

(Got your attention now, huh? And I'm only on Page 2 of my notes.)

Detroit has only been in the Grand Prix business for three years and isn't quite as prestigious of a race as those of Monte Carlo and Long Beach, but both Dennis and Lauda find its 2½-mile track comparable.

It's a little bit easier to drive and easier to handle with a turbo-charged car, and as far as a street circuit, as opposed to a permanent Grand Prix track, it rates better than Monte Carlo. Chalk up a big point for Detroit.

Lauda is something of an oddity in racing. Following a fiery crash in 1976, a crash that left his left ear and portions of his face permanently disfigured, Lauda climbed back into a Grand Prix and continued to race until a few years ago, when he supposedly retired. He came out of retirement to race for McLaren.

It's Lauda's life that's on the line in each Grand Prix race, and he admits that it took a large portion of the '77 racing year to overcome the fear associated with the '76 crash.

He walks the circuit prior to the pre-race trials, getting to know the little nuances and safety factors of the course he will race and hopefully win on. The Detroit circuit, according to Lauda is "much safer than some permanent tracks. The speeds are much slower so the chance of having a bad accident are lower."

Chalk up another point for Detroit. Lauda likes his line of work, and admits he'll be back next year, whether he wins the world championship or not this year. Second best in the world isn't quite his favorite position, which he attributes "to a lack of experience from the past."

"Next year," he says, "I'll do better. My problem this year is that this is the first time on these tracks with a turbo-charged car."

There's no question in Lauda's mind that Detroit's course is "interesting," but Sunday's race was difficult "because of the pressures of the circuit."

"I have to make the best out of the race and go home with nine points (the number awarded for a victory) in my pocket," he says. It's a very difficult race because of the pressures from the circuit."

This might be Grand Prix III for Detroit, but for me it was Grand Prix I. I think next year I may get so gutsy that I'll go to the time trials. Who knows, by Grand Prix III (by my count) I may even see the race itself.

(See, I told you it got better.)

"In any form of racing you have to have a set up perfectly before you put the drive in. We're never confident about any race. We came here with a clean sheet of paper. We came here with our feet on the ground and are going to do the best we can."

— Ronald Dennis
McLaren team manager with McLaren team manager Ron Dennis.)

The engine, a "multi million project" for McLaren, was four years in the making and when the car was completed late last year it hit the Grand Prix racing circuit, it had not been tested. In fact, Dennis believes that that engine is the only "fully purposed engine made for Formula 1 racing; most are manufactured types that are modified for the circuit."

(Now, don't nod off, it gets better.)
The car was designed from scratch and is right on in the weight limit for F1 cars, especially a Trouble on lake?

To the Editor:
Once again summer in Belleville is upon us. The sun shines brightly on our lake with warm, gentle breezes blowing lightly across the water.

When out of the west, comes a hurtling blue flash. A white rocket is trailing slightly behind with a red glare seen bringing up the rear. Are these exotic species of birds skimming the water at breakneck speeds? NO! From the roar of engines heard throughout the streets of Belleville and Van Buren Township, could it be three downed space ships? NO!

These are three boats, marine pleasure crafts so named, operated by three individuals with aspirations of Detroit's Gold Cup Hydroplane Race Fame. Immaterial that Belleville Lake is only seven miles long and less than one-half mile wide. No thought to the boaters, skiers or people fishing who leisurely cruise these same waters. So what if the noise from their engines can overpower any normal conversation, car engine, truck horn, train whistle or plane roar. There isn't any speed limit or noise pollution law on this lake or person with authority here to enforce it.

With the increase of residences, single and multiple, along the Belleville Lake shoreline and the number of boats seen on the water at all hours, will it take a drastic summer accident to ban this type of unwanted boater from our waters?

Chief Leonard Keller of the Van Buren Township Police Department is one of 25 Michigan police chiefs who will be honored this week in Traverse City at the summer conference of the Michigan Association of Chiefs of Police.
Keller received first prize in the Traffic Safety Awards for communities of 20,000 to 35,000. Charles Lindstrom of Holland finished in second place, and honorable mentions went to Richard Butler of Kalamazoo and Jack Patterson of Grosse Pointe Farms.
Awards are given to the police department which has shown the most improvement during the last year. In 1983, 121 police departments competed for the Traffic Safety Awards.

The police departments honored "are to be commended for the fine efforts in accident investigation and selective traffic law enforcement, particularly against the drinking driver, and for occupant protection activities," stated Ray DeCornu, president of the association.
The Awards Committee is comprised of Howard Cox, executive director of the Traffic Safety Association of Michigan, Captain Paul Ruge, Michigan State Police, Dan Lee, Michigan State University Highway Safety Programs, Max Pinkney, Michigan Office of Highway Safety Planning, and Robert DeCorte, Auto Club of Michigan.

Hyder — Parr exchange vows

Approximately 150 guests were in attendance for the June 9 wedding of Theresa Lynn Hyder of Charleston, South Carolina, and Joseph Edward Parr of Bremerton, Washington.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin H. Hyder Jr. of Charleston, while the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Parr of Westland.

The double ring ceremony was held at Deer Park Baptist Church in Charleston, which was decorated with Boston ferns, candelabras and flower arrangements, created by the mother of the bride. Dr. Archie C. Neal officiated.

The bride chose a Mori Lee floor-length gown of organza over polyester, Chantilly and alencon lace accented the bodice and skirt. The chapel-length train also was accented in alternating rows of Chantilly and alencon lace, while the wrist-length sleeves were trimmed with Chantilly lace.

A wreath of pearls and silk flowers held her fingertip illusion veil in place. The blusher was accented with pearls, and the entire headpiece was highlighted by a flounce of illusion at the back of the wreath.

She carried a cascade bouquet of white and pink roses, white daisies, white and pink carnations, silk cocktail orchids and baby's breath, accented with white, pink and lace streamers.

The sister of the bride, Amy Hyder of Charleston, served as her maid of honor. She wore a floor-length Aria Argent formal gown of light pink acetate. The fitted bodice was accented by a lace motif on the princess neckline and by short puffed sleeves. A wide pink sash was tied in a bow in the back. Her bouquet, made by the bride's mother, consisted of white silk daisies, queen's lace, pink roses, a shade darker than her dress, and was accented with white, pink and lace streamers.

The bridesmaids were Jessica Simpson of Charlottesville, Virginia, Deborah Wiley of Banner Elk, North Carolina, Cameron McManus of Matthews, North Carolina, Donlyn Litchford of Columbia, South Carolina, Ginger Lopp of Charleston, Beth Carr of Fayetteville, North Carolina, Josephine Veloso of Charleston and Cindy Furr of Pineville, North Carolina.

Their gowns matched that of the honor attendant in style, but were in a seaspray green color. Their bouquets, also made by the bride's mother, consisted of white silk daisies, queen's lace and roses pink, the shade of the honor attendant's gown. They were accented with white and pink streamers.

Raymond Keller, the groom's best friend, served as the best man. Groomsmen were Bob Donaldson of Grayling, Michigan, Mark Brittain of Portland, Oregon, Stephen Givens of Charleston, Ben Hyder, brother of the bride, Mark Spoon of Charlotte, North Carolina, Linus Parr, brother of the groom, Scott Blizard of Titusville, Florida, and Si Parr, brother of the groom.

The junior attendants were Angela and Kierran Casey, the daughter and son of Lt. Com. and Mrs. Patrick J. Casey of Maitland, Florida. Their outfits were miniatures of the bridesmaids and groomsmen.

The bride's mother wore a long formal apricot-colored gown. Her corsage was of white roses and miniature carnations. The groom's mother chose a long formal gown in a lavender shade. Her corsage also was of white roses and miniature carnations.

Music for the ceremony was provided by Mrs. W.V. Martin on the piano, Alphonso Brown, organist, Sylvia Suarez and Colleen McLanahan, pianist, Vic Lawson, French horn, Deborah Wiley, flutist, and Amy Hyder, viola. The soloists were Michelle Williams and Cindy Furr.

The couple honeymooned for two weeks while enroute from Charleston to their new home in Bremerton.

The new Mrs. Parr is a 1982 graduate of R.B. Stall High School and attended Queens College in Charlotte, North Carolina, for two years, majoring in music therapy. She hopes to complete her degree work at the University of Washington. She serves on the executive board of the National Association of Music Therapy Students.

Her husband, a graduate of Wayne Memorial High School, is serving in the U.S. Navy.

Smith — Wyzykowski marry

Palms and ferns, standing baskets of flowers and candelabra decorated St. Augustine Cathedral in Kalamazoo for the June 23 wedding of Elaine Ann Smith of Tampa, Florida, and Chester John Wyzykowski III of Springhill, Florida.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Smith of Three Rivers, Michigan, while the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Wyzykowski Jr. of Springhill, Florida, formerly of Southgate.

Approximately 150 guests were in attendance for the double ring ceremony, officiated by the rector, Rev. John E. Warner. The music was by the St. Augustine Choir, organist John Balka, who performed the "Trumpet Voluntary" by Purcell, "Ave Verum Corpus" by Mozart and "Toccata" by Widor.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, chose a cathedral length gown of silk organza over taffeta, with an alencon lace bodice and collar, beaded with white pearls and clear sequins. Alencon lace also accented the lower portion of the leg o' mutton sleeves and medallions of alencon lace on the puffed portion of the sleeves. The cathedral train featured three tiers of silk mushroom pleated lace, alencon lace medallions and three satin bows. The A-line skirt also was hemmed deeply with alencon lace, with lace medallion accenting the skirt throughout.

Her veil was cathedral length with the blusher in white illusion and was attached to a coronet of white pearls and rhinestones, worn by the groom's mother on her wedding day. Her cascade bouquet was of white roses, ivy, stephanotis and baby's breath.

The bride asked her sister, Diane Smith of Three Rivers, to serve as her maid of honor. She wore a pink satin sleeveless ball gown, with petticoat, cummerbund and ruffle at the scoop neckline. Her headpieces was of pink roses, stephanotis, baby's breath and lavender forget-me-nots, attached to a pink illusion veil. Her nosegay was also made up of pink roses, stephanotis, baby's breath and lavender forget-me-nots.

The bridesmaids were Ramona Smith, sister-in-law of the bride, from Lichenstein-Unterhausen, West Germany, Karen Wyzykowski, of Zephyrhills, Florida, sister of the groom, and Stacy Diedrich of Flat Rock, cousin of the groom.

Their gowns matched that of the honor attendant's. Their headpieces were of pink roses, stephanotis, baby's breath and lavender forget-me-nots, with white, lavender and pink streamers. They carried small bouquets of those same flowers.

The flowergirl was Brandi Smith, who wore a similar dress and carried a basket of pink roses, stephanotis, lavender forget-me-nots and baby's breath. The ringbearer was Richard Cook.

The groom asked Kevin Shonk of Romulus, his cousin, to serve as his best man. The ushers were Mark Smith of Lichenstein-Unterhausen, West Germany, the bride's brother, Mark Clark of Southgate, friend of the groom and Mark Wyzykowski of Springhill, Florida, brother of the groom.

Mrs. Smith chose a long dress of periwinkle crepe, with long sleeves, schiffli lace at the neckline and cuff. Her corsage was of periwinkle and white roses.

Tom's Tavern

Serving up good food and entertainment

By SUE McDONALD
ANP News Editor

In its hayday, it wasn't unusual to have Diana Ross or The Four Freshmen perform there, and while the old Wayne Show Bar is no more, its successor, Tom's Tavern is still serving up good food and entertainment seven nights a week.

Tom and Anne Christopoulos have been operating Tom's Tavern for five years, and although some of the grandeur of the old Show Bar is gone, you can still conjur up memories of croning of up and coming and coming young entertainers of the '50s and '60s.

"Basically, we like to have people come in because they like the place," explained Christopoulos.

His wife quickly adds that "we want to make it the type of place we would like to go to."

The tavern seats 100 persons comfortably, with the entertainment performing from a raised stage, situated behind the curving show bar. For those with a penchant for video games, pinball or a game of pool, there's an arcade room and enclosed area for the pool tables.

However, when Christopoulos talks about the tavern, he talks about food, something near and dear to his heart. He comes from a family steeped in the food business. He like his two brothers, owned a coney island restaurant before making the move to the tavern business.

There's plenty to choose from the menu — ground round hamburgers, TT's tacos, taco salad, french fries, onion rings and french fried mushrooms are among the choices on the menu. Monday through Friday he features specials. Monday and Thursday are ground round days, with his tasty quarter pounders selling for 95 cents. He also offers specials on coney islands at 50 cents each on Tuesdays, and taco salads for 95 cents on Fridays.

Wednesdays are 95-cent day for one Christopoulos' own creations, TT's tacos. He got come to town — Pat Sheridan, who grew up and played high school ball in Wayne.

Starting this week will be the rock 'n roll group, Finns, which will be playing music of the '50s and '60s Thursday through Saturday.

While Christopoulos is businessman, spending many an hour in the tavern, he also is active in the community. For the second year in a row, he sponsored a benefit picnic for the Muscular Dystrophy Association, raising more than $600.

He also organizes baseball buses three or four times a summer, and has one scheduled for Aug. 14 for local fans to travel to Tiger Stadium for a game between the California Angeles and the best in the American League East. The cost is $17 per person for the roundtrip fun fest and tickets can be obtained at the tavern.

While you can almost always find Christopoulos around the tavern, there are two "fixtures", who have a winning way with the customers. Debbie Arms and Mary McBain have been greeting customers and serving up food and brew at the tavern for 12 and 11 years respectively.

Tom's Tavern is located at 32413 Michigan Avenue, east of Venoy, Wayne.

the idea for the tacos — ground beef, shredded cheese, tomato and lettuce on a hot dog bun — seven years ago. Columnist Bob Talbert tasted the concoction and labeled it a Greek taco, but when Tom's Tavern was opened it became TT's taco.

On Saturday nights, sports fans can get an earful from radio personality Super Fan Ron Cameron and his guests, which have included columnist Joe Falls and Detroit Tiger star Howard Johnson. Christopoulos is hoping to lineup a hometown star for Cameron's 7:30 p.m. show when the Kansas City Royals

Costello still changing

ELVIS COSTELLO
& THE ATTRACTIONS
"Goodbye Cruel World"
(Columbia)

Elvis Costello has always changed musical identities with each new album; nothing drastic, mind you, but enough to let you know that he wasn't going to get stale.

Surprisingly, "Goodbye Cruel World" is very much from the same mold as last year's excellent "Punch The Clock," yet subtle differences (not to mention another set of breathtaking songs) make this album a snappy addition to the Costello catalogue.

As with past Elvis LPs, it's the songs that are the meat, while the musical embellishments of the Attractions and Costello's own always-improving singing add garnishes fit for a king.

Four of the album's 13 tunes were unveiled at Ann Arbor's Hill Auditorium a few months ago, where Costello performed a solo concert. To be honest, it would be difficult to improve on them because, as opposed to this group setting, the live versions were more personal.

I expected to be disappointed. I wasn't.

"Home Truth" is a startling renovation of the typical love-gone-bad theme, hitting hard from the beginning with lines like "I hung up the phone tonight/ Just as you said I love you/ Once this would have been coincidence/ Now these things start to bother me." By the end of the song though, Costello has found the truth via absurdity: "So I turn on the TV again/ And the world comes crashing in/ Is it my shirt or my toothpaste/ That is whiter than white."

For some unknown reason, keyboard whiz Steve Nieve's name is nowhere to be found on either the album cover or the inside sleeve, although his carnival-like organ playing sound is present on many of the songs. I'm not sure who's playing it; there are no keyboard credits at all.

"The Only Flame In Town" is a Staxish tune, complete with the Philly horn sound and a vocal duet with Daryl Hall, while "Room Without a Number" is about as rockin' as Costello gets this time out, with maybe the exception of "Sour Milk-Cow Blues," which isn't nearly as tongue-in-cheek as the good-time music conveys: "You dial a number and they offer relief/ All alone with just your own device/ They give you something and it isn't advice/ To break the heart of a million listeners/ Start out as lovers and you end up as prisoners."

The only disappointing number on the LP is the only non-original, Farnell Jenkins "I Wanna Be Loved." Unfortunately, this is also slated to be the first single, which is a shame because there are many, many more commercially viable songs, such as the fantastic swipe at MTV and other assorted subjects that is "Worthless Thing," or the brilliant "Peace In Our Time," which may be the best song Elvis has ever written.

Costello's vast legion of fans should be happy with this album, but while it may not win over many new ones, that's more due to the fact that if they can be won over, he's probably already done it. It may not be his best, but "Goodbye Cruel World" is still leaps and bounds above most of the releases of the year.

Sorry about that!

Competition was fierce at the annual Wayne Diaper Derby last week as contestants matched crawling speed on the mat at the Community Center. The Sports Meridian

They're heading West again

TOM MOORADIAN
Sports Editor

The area will lose another outstanding educator, former coach and person on July 16.

Ray Rafford, who has earned the respect of the community as an outstanding educator and coach at Wayne Memorial and who is presently an assistant superintendent of schools for the Wayne-Westland School District, will be leaving the area to accept a post with the Mesa, Arizona Public Schools.

Rafford's title with the Mesa schools also will be an assistant superintendent.

"I will be leaving a lot of friends and associates behind," Rafford said by telephone yesterday. "My wife, Barbara, and I have deep roots here, and over a period of two decades there are a lot of pleasant memories."

"But Mesa offered a challenge in a bigger school district where the growth is phenomenal," Rafford continued. "While we're witnessing declines in student population in most school districts in Michigan, Mesa is thriving. It is a place with a future."

"And I want my family to be a part of that future."

Rafford came on the athletic scene in 1965, replacing Don Haney as head wrestling coach at Wayne Memorial. His protege, Randy Rodriguez, a 133-pounder, captured a gold medal in the state tournament in 1966. Rafford's teams also produced such outstanding grapplers as Don Wallace, a 120-pounder, and Gary Root, 165, both of whom came within one victory of winning state titles.

After Haney returned to the coaching scene, Rafford continued to stay active in the sport as an assistant coach and an official. In the early 70's he gave that up to devote all of his energies to education.

Rafford becomes the third prominent educator (that I know of) who is heading West. Longtime W-W school superintendent, Dr. Timothy Dyer, recently accepted a superintendent's position in Arizona, and John T. Lange, Executive Director of the Wayne-Westland Community Schools, will join the staff of the Arizona Department of Education as the deputy superintendent and state director of Vocational Education.

Back at home, Wayne Memorial's head football coach Floyd Carter also was in a traveling mood last week. He's up in Lansing at the Michigan State University Sports School on an invitation by head Spartan coach George Perles.

"We're conducting a football school under the auspices of MSU," Carter said. "We have some talented young people up here."

Two of those standouts — line-backer Mike Kortzetti and running-back Bob McArthur — are among the key players who Carter will be relying upon to help Wayne with the Wolverine "A" this year.

"I'm looking forward to the season," Carter said. "It won't be long now."

Is it really that time of the year again?

FLOYD CARTER

Duel for possession

The "Strikers" Daniel Besson races from behind in an attempt to detour a Livonia player from reaching his goal. The action was shot during the division championships of the Michigan State Youth Soccer Association's Great Lakes Division game that ended in the Belleville team's 2-0 victory. The "Strikers" are sponsored locally by the Tin Lizzie Restaurant and are made up of players who are 12 and under. Livonia entered the match with an untarnished record.

Contest dates announced

Canton seeks 'superstars'

Who are the best young athletes in Canton Township?

That question may be answered on Saturday, July 14 when the Canton Parks and Recreation Department stages its Fifth Annual "Youth Superstars" contest.

Participants in the "Superstar" contest compete in a series of events that test a variety of athletic skills, including basketball, golf, soccer, running and the competitors are placed in divisions according to their ages.

The break-down for the age group is: 9-and-under; 10-12, and 13-15. The competitions are opened to boys and girls.

Awards will be presented to each age group. Registration will be accepted on the day of the competition at 9:30 a.m., at Griffin Park.

Telephone the Recreation Department at 397-1000 for further information.

In other Canton Recreation news, the threesome of Fritz Tallian, Jr., Bob Tallian and Fritz Tallian, Sr. took top honors in the fourth annual Canton Festival Golf Tournament with a 10-under par 62 at Fellows Creek Golf Course.

They beat the two time champions John Domka, Gary Palis, and Jay Pesant by one stroke. The new champs combined 5 birdies on each nine for their ten-under total.

Tied at 64 were the group of Jeff Hagan, Bob Bartelt and Mike Gapski and the group of Paul Shay, Mike Shay and John Foster. Third place was awarded to the Shay group through the tie-breaking procedure.

Bob Green won the long drive competition. Three other groups scored fine 7-under 65's as the competition was strong throughout the entire field of participants.

All participants enjoyed the fine test of Fellows Creek Golf Course on a warm, sunny day.

Gymnastics, hockey offered

The Romulus Parks and Recreation Department is offering a summer gymnastics course, starting July 12 and for 8-weeks for beginners and advanced students.

Classes will be conducted at 6 p.m. on Thursday in the Recreation Building Complex. For further information, please contact rec. officials at 941-0666, extension 254.

Those interested in competing in an Over 40 hockey league in Inkster may make inquiries at the Inkster Parks and Recreation Department by telephoning 565-6950. The contact person is Ed Ross Sr.

The Inkster league is expanding from six to eight teams and former players will be sent registration forms, while new players are also being accepted.

Games are staged Thursday nights at the Inkster Ice Arena and the John Canfield Arena (Dearborn Heights).

Riling an All-Star

Belleville's Keith Riling was named as a member of the 1984 Michigan High School Baseball Coaches Association All-Star Team.

Riling will play against a visiting Illinois All-Star club at noon, Wed., June 27 at Detroit Tiger Stadium. He also competed for the All-Stars in a game scheduled for June 25 at Kyte Stadium in Monroe, featuring the Detroit area All-Stars and the Outstate All-Stars.

Rush is on to enter city golf championship

If early registration for the "Silver Anniversary" of the 1984 City Championship Golf Invitational is any indication of the tournament's success, this year's event will be the best.

More than 40 golfers have already indicated their readiness to compete in the July 21-22 championships.

"This year's response is the best," said tournament director William Hawley. "It seems that the weather, the golfers — everything — has fallen into place. These guys want to play."

The format of this year's competition, as was the last 24 tournaments, is set up for a two-day meet. On the first day (Sat., July 21), golfers will play a qualifying round of 18-holes, then return for the second round (Sun. July 22) and the championships.

"We will send golfers out the second day according to the way they finished the first round," Hawley said. "Those who are in the championship flights will get the earliest tee off times."

The tournament will be staged at the Dun Rovin Golf Course in Plymouth and competitors will be faced with a 6,760-yard, par 72 layout. It is only the second time in the 25 year history of the City Championships that Dun Rovin has been the host. Course officials say that the "course is in perfect condition."

The competitions are open to all amateur male golfers who will be competing for the city titles of Wayne, Westland, Canton, Inkster, Romulus and Garden City.

Residents and persons working in these communities may compete for the championships. The tournament will also determine the make-up of each city's 5-man team which will compete in the state Parks and Recreation championships. (Only bona fide residents of a community may compete for that community at state).

Trophies will be awarded to the top three finishers of each of the flights and additional flights will be organized only if the total entry of a city warrants it. There will also be a special trophy for the medalist (low scorer) for the entire tournament.

Please enter me in the 1984 Silver Anniversary City Championship Golf Tournament which will be played on Saturday and Sunday, July 21 and July 22 at the Dun Rovin Golf Course, 16377 Haggerty Road, Plymouth. Registration fee for the two-day competition is $30. Checks or money orders should be made out to Bill Hawley, tournament manager, and should be mailed to or dropped off at The Associated Newspapers, 35540 Michigan Avenue, Wayne, Michigan.

Watch out for those Pistons, too

The Detroit Pistons have been a mystery since moving here from Fort Wayne 26 years ago. They haven't come close to winning a championship. In fact, Detroit has finished above the .500 mark just four times.

But, things are changing. Last season, the Pistons finished with a 49-33 record, coming within one game of winning the Central Division title.

The Pistons were weak defensively and lacked a shot-blocker, otherwise they could have contended for the championship.

The Pistons have corrected those problems, I believe, trading for one of the NBA's best power forwards, Dan Roundfield, without really disrupting their team. Roundfield is 31-years-old, which is old as far as basketball players go. But he had a good season a year ago and is just what the doctor ordered for the Pistons.

Roundfield has made the all-defensive team in the league three times. He's a real good shot-blocker and a good post up player. He's a good rebounder and shooter as well.

Also, the Pistons appeared to do well in the draft, coming up with Ohio State's Tony Campbell in the first round and Michigan's Eric Turner in the second.

Campbell's an excellent athlete.

Turner came out of Michigan a year early, and is coming off a terrible season. But he's quick, can handle the ball and is a better shooter than he showed a year ago. The other day I had Pistons

General Manager Jack McCloskey on my TV show. Here's what we talked about.

ME — One of the criticisms of the Roundfield trade is the age factor with Roundfield being 31. How do you answer that?

McCLOSKEY — He's still in his prime. He takes good care of himself, and he's coming off a real good season. I think Roundfield has at least three or four good seasons left in him.

ME — Last season you almost won your division. Would anything less than first place satisfy you?

McCLOSKEY — No. That trade should put us over the hump. Roundfield is just the type player we needed.

ME — Are you happy with what you got in the draft?

McCLOSKEY — Yes. Tony Campbell, as far as we were concerned, was the best small forward in the draft. At Ohio State he did it all: score, rebound, pass and handle the ball. One reason we drafted Campbell was the fact that he had a much better vertical leap than anybody else. As far as Turner goes, we're going by what he did before last season. What happened last year, I don't know. But he has a good chance of making our team. He's a good talent.

ME — Is this Pistons team good enough now to win it all?

McCLOSKEY — If everything goes our way we have a chance. We have some talent now and we are a better team than last season.

Wayne women's softball action

J&D Auto is still the team to beat

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Staff Writer

J & D Auto, speeding along on a perfect 6-0 record, continues to dominate the Wayne Parks and Recreation Women's Class A Division this season.

And while J & D is the one to catch in Class A, over in the Men's Over 35 League, Harlow Tire (3-0) picked up its third consecutive win, but still can't shake challengers' Brock Brothers and Knights of Columbus who are close behind with 2-0 records.

In the meantime, Mitches' exploded for five runs in the top of the seventh to turn back J & D, Little Bill's in a Class A men's match-up as Jim Cordora and John Bullard each slammed three singles for the winners.

Tim Kabants' three hits, including a double, powered Pewter past the Stars 7-4, while New World blanked Wayne 16-0 thanks to an 18-hit assault that featured Jeff Carter's four hits and an equal number of RBIs. Jerry Holbrook and Bruce Rize split six hits — all singles for the victors.

Warren Field rallied for two runs in the bottom of the seventh to edge Silver Saloon 5-4 in the only other Class A game reported.

Cheryl Trudell blasted a home run, singled and doubled to lead Paddy's Pub to a lopsided 17-1 victory over Jake's in a Class B Divisional game last week. Trudell counted five runs batted in for this one. Teammate Diane Beagan picked up a pair of RBIs, and also three hits.

Old Wayne came back and clubbed Jake's 9-2, scoring four big ones in the second inning.

Greg's erupted for 10 runs in the first inning and went on to win a 16-7 decision over Jake's as Shelly Misner contributed two singles and a triple in a winning cause.

Village B Bar got little resistance from Henry VIII, winning a 13-3 contest.

Mary Brewis's three hits produced three RBIs as Paddy's stopped Old Wayne 8-5 in their first confrontation of the 1984 summer campaign, and Old Wayne again fell victim, this time to Ann's Pub, 10-9, as Sherry Sikes drilled a home run and a single.

Simpson, Billings named all-Northwest

The baseball coaches of the six Northwest Suburban League schools gathered together in the last few weeks to select their All-League selections and several local baseball players made the honor roll.

Redford Thurston, the 1984 State Class B baseball champions, led the way with four first-team selections and one second-team choice.

Making the first team were outfielder Tim DeMarco, designated hitter Dave Kress, pitcher Greg Sommerville, and catcher Bob Rousseau.

The second team choice from the Eagles' squad was infielder Dave Dziobak. Thurston, who clinched the state championship with a 2-1 victory over Wyoming Park on Saturday, finished in a tie for the Northwest Suburban League crown with a 6-4 record this past season.

Westland John Glenn, who finished the season at 15-9, placed two of their players on the squad.

Cass Simpson, the 5-11 shortstop, made the first team as one of the infielders. Simpson batted .321 on the season while anchoring Coach Norm Hoenes' infield.

Bruce Billings, who led the Rockets in hitting with a phenomenal .407 average and played a stellar centerfield, also made the first team. Billings led the Rockets in nearly every offensive category including RBIs, runs scored, and hits as well as average.

Brad Martin, a 6-3 junior third baseman, made the second team for the Rockets and gives Hoenes a smile because he will have the entire left side of the infield back next year. Martin batted .372

Microsurgery restores failing vision

By SUE McDONALD
ANP News Editor

For Frances Happ of Westland, the problem with her vision began about five years ago. It was a problem she shares with millions of Americans and an indication the aging process is moving ahead.

It began as a blurring of the images she saw and progressed to the point where she needed to squint to see on bright days. She knew that eventually she would need corrective surgery, and at the urging of her family decided in April it was time to get help.

Happ chose Dr. Ronald Coburn, a noted cataract surgeon, and the three-hour visit to his clinic in Dearborn proved to be an education in and of itself. She found that her cataracts, which Dr. Coburn called "chips of cement," were treatable. That in a half-hour procedure, she would be rid of the cataract and have an implant that would focus the images that were then cloudy. That the use of the laser is such surgery was not possible at present.

By the time she left the clinic she had her date with Dr. Coburn at Straith Hospital in Southfield. Six weeks later, at the insistence of his staff, she was ferried by chauffeured limousine to the hospital for the first of two operations. The limousine is a service Dr. Coburn provides free of charge to those of his patients who have no way to get to the hospital.

Once through the process of being admitted to the hospital as an outpatient and the necessary laboratory tests, she was prepared for surgery. A hard rubber ball, slightly smaller than a tennis ball and with a strap feeding through a hold in its center, was fastened around her head, with the ball positioned over her left eye. The pressure of the ball on the eye softens the cataract, making it more pliable for removal.

The procedure chosen by Dr. Coburn was phacoemulsification, in which the cataract is shattered by ultra sonic waves and literally vacuumed from the eye, leaving the back capsule of the lens to support an implanted lens.

A local anesthetic is used for the microscopic surgery. Strains of Gerschwinn's "Rhapsody in Blue" played in the background as Dr. Coburn began the process of making a layered incision at the edge of the cornea. A TV in the background magnified the eye and the surgery being performed and made the cataract appear to be a grapefruit-sized opaque mass.

At times, the cataract looked like shredded material blowing in the wind as it slowly broke apart . . .

Once the incision was made, the doctor scraped the surface of the softened cataract to "rough it up" in preparation for the phacoemulsification. A pen-shaped instrument was then inserted and in a matter of minutes pieces of the cataract began to break off and disappear up its hollowed point.

At times the cataract looked like shredded material blowing in the wind as it slowly broke apart, and with the fracturing of each new piece of it, the cloudiness was replaced with a dark clarity.

Twenty minutes into the procedure, the cataract no longer there, a lens, suspended in the middle of a S-shaped wire was slipped into the eye. Impervious to the formation of cataracts, it will serve to focus the light entering the eye and restores much of the vision lost with the removal of the cataract.

Once in place, Dr. Coburn began the process of closing the incision. Stitches, much like cross stitches used in embroidery but mere microns in size, close the incision. It has been only 25 minutes since the operation started.

A bandage and eye shield were applied to protect the eye, and at 30 minutes, almost to the second, Happ, one of 12 patients Dr. Coburn operated on that day, was on her way to a 10-minute stay in the recovery way. From there she was taken to a hospital room, where she received her first solid food since midnight and was readied for her return trip home.

She was given her instructions — no sleeping on her left side, in case of a headache, take a non-aspirin substance, no bending over for prolonged periods of time.

Four and a half hours after entering Straith Hospital, she was on her way out the door, the limousine and flowers from the doctor and his staff waiting for her.

For Frances Happ, it was one "chip of cement" down, and one to go. For Dr. Ronald Coburn, it was just another day in the operating room. Successes for Dr. Coburn are many, but for each and every one of his patients there is a personal individualism, that endears him to those he helps.

Herring wins scholarship

The Belleville Business and Professional Womens Club's (BPW) annual $500 scholarship, for a Belleville High School senior girl this year went to Elizabeth (Beth) A. Herring, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Herring of Belleville.

Herring was chosen for her academic achievement, being among the top 10 of her class of 432 graduates.

She attended St. Anthony school from second grade through eighth, and then completed her four years of high school at BHS. The high point of Herring's interest, has been her participation in 4-H work for the past 10 years. She has raised beef cattle and sold five at public auction.

In 1982, she raised the Wayne County grand champion steer, and it was purchased by Bilmar Supermarket of Romulus. She has raised horses, swine and sheep, and has become very efficient in horsemanship.

She was a member of the equestrian team of Belleville High School in both her junior and senior year and was chosen as outstanding rider, plus being captain of the team.

The office of president of the National Honor Society was held by Herring in her senior year.

Athletics also hold an interest for Herring, and she has been a member of the cross country team, track team and manager of the wrestling team.

Elizabeth Herring

Herring has been accepted by Michigan State University, where she plans on majoring in pre-veterinary medicine.

When time permits, she enjoys photography, sailing, reading and dancing.

Past Matrons hold June meeting

The June meeting of the Past Matron's Association of Belleville Chapter No. 73, OES, was held at the Bedell Street home of Past Matron Ruby Clayton on Thursday, June 7, with 18 members present.

Following the usual luncheon, the president, Ruby Clayton, conducted a short business meeting. The Chaplain, Florence McKelvey, had devotions by reading a poem by Helen Steiner Rice, "A Memorial Day Prayer," followed by a prayer and the Lord's Prayer repeated in unison.

It was decided to have the annual picnic on Thursday, July 19, at noon at the home of Elda Bohl on Robson Road.

Lucky winners of the drawing were Wilma Tator and Rose Welt.

Wilma Tator will be the September hostess.

for one of their most precious resources, their vision. A graduate of Wayne State University Medical School, Dr. Coburn is quiet and shy about his skill. He would rather spend time educating people about cataracts, than touting his ability. He graciously accepts the gifts from his patients, but readily admits the smiles on their faces when the eye patch is removed and they can see, although not perfectly, is reward enough.

A master of his specialty, he has none of the aloofness of being one of the best, even though he is. His patients come from as far away as India and England, or as close as Westland, but none of the notoriety seems to have affected his boyish charm. He has a purpose in life and each day sets about to meet the challenge of helping people see.

In the case of Frances Happ, he has met that goal. Her vision in her left eye, much to hers and Dr. Coburn's surprise, has been restored to 20/20.

ANP News Editor Sue McDonald followed Frances Happ through her contact with Dr. Coburn from her initial visit through surgery and her trip home. Her interest in the case went beyond strictly reporting. The patient is her mother, who will undergo her second cataract operation in July.

135 set pace for CROP Walk

The Belleville-Romulus annual CROP Walk-a-thon raised $2,500 for hungry persons locally and worldwide.

Thirty-five Belleville participants met at St. Anthony's Church in Belleville June 3 and walked down Huron River Drive to Romulus's Community United Methodist Church, while the 100 participants met at the Romulus church and reversed the route to Belleville.

The Walk-a-thon was not limited to young people. Aldine Potter, 76, of Belleville's First United Methodist Church walked the entire distance and raised $145 dollars.

"I was tired but I love to walk," she said.

A rest stop was provided by Little Caesar's Pizza Treat, a restaurant on Huron River Drive, and volunteers served water to the walkers.

Belleville's First United Methodist Church is responsible for the largest amount of money raised by a group, $725. The largest amount pledged to an individual was $334 pledged to Cora Vandecar. Romulus's St. Aloysius Church joined the walk-a-thon for the first time. Romulus's Community United Methodist Church had the largest number of participants.

CROP's next Walk-a-thon will be on the first Sunday in October 1985.

the letter writer . . . by ginny eades

A PLEA TO PRESIDENT REAGAN

Dear Letter Writer:

I have written a letter to the President and need your help in refining or rewriting it.

Sincerely, JH

Dear President Reagan:

It is with a heavy heart that I address this correspondence to you. Frankly, I do not know where else to turn. In 1981, I lost my job as Senior Sales Engineer with a Detroit alloy filtration products firm. Since that time my family and I have been living in quiet, desperate subsistence. A house we had in Ohio was sold, providing money upon which to live. Unemployment benefits of $182 a week did not maintain a family of six and ran out long ago.

Mr. Reagan, before you leap to any conclusions, I have not been sitting on my keister, collecting unemployment. I have been grossly underemployed and exploited as a commissioned sales representative invariably cheated out of my earnings.

As I write this, it has been six weeks since I have received any income from my employer. I also have been searching for solid employment for approximately the past four weeks.

As of this date I have endured the following:

My wife's 1978 car was repossessed; I was approximately 33 days late in making payments. The car was paid off once, but I had to take out a $5,000 loan to provide money to live on until "things get better."

My family and I are about to be evicted from our house. We've been here for 4-plus years and are now unable to pay the rent. I am due to appear in court on June 20, 1984.

I am in the process of a personal bankruptcy in an effort to rid myself of this debt burden. My application to the Michigan Department of Social Services for assistance has been refused, because I am working, albeit, not being paid.

Frankly, Mr. President, I am at my wit's end. I am not like this. Until 1981, I paid my bills on time, provided for my family, was enroute to achieving my own American Dream. Even while underemployed, I did what I had to do in order to remain current in my personal business. Now, due to circumstances beyond my control, I am perplexed. Mr. President, I have been a Republican since high school days, when I was active in Young Republicans. I was a sustaining member of the Republican National Committee from 1981-1983, when I could no longer give financially. During your 1980 campaign, I passed out literature, and, one can guess which lever I pulled in November of that year. I am not the stereo-typical person one finds in my situation. I am educated, a bachelor's degree in history and business. I have been an active member of my community, Jaycee's, Kiwanis, YMCA Executive board member, United Way volunteer, and so on. I am an active member of my Church, teach Sunday School, am in the Choir, and participate in special activities. Somehow, the pieces do not match properly. These types of things are "not supposed to happen" to people like me. Somehow, the neatly planned system and safety nets are not in place.

Mr. President, I do not want charity, or welfare, or food stamps, or any of the other Social Programs. I do not want to live in subsidized housing, and have my children get free school lunches. I do want a decent job where I can provide for and support my family, a job where I can advance according to my skills and abilities. I do want my share of the American Dream and a solid legacy for my children. I am an American and damn proud of it, Mr. President. My ancestors came to this continent in the 1720s, fought for our Independence, fought to keep this land free, bled on fields of battle in all our wars. Somehow, Mr. Reagan, I do not believe they ever thought one of their descendants would be in such dire straits.

Mr. President, can you help me? I do not know where else to turn. Enclosed, find a copy of my resume.

Our prayers are with you as you guide Our Nation, Mr. President.

Sincerely, JH

RESOLUTION: This letter was sent exactly as written by JH, with only minor punctuation changes. This letter is wrought with the emotions and fears and feelings of desperation common to us all. It speaks for itself. It was mailed on June 14, 1984 from Detroit, Michigan. We anxiously await a response.

Our Cover Girls

Win or lose, each team usually produces a MVP (Most Valuable Player). These athletes are something special not only because of their athletic skills but usually because they contribute more than 100 percent to their team's cause. Those young ladies selected for The Associated Newspapers' "Cover girls" lifted their teams to victory and encouraged them on despite the score. They truly are MVPs.

Romulus: City of Champions

If you seek one school that has produced more championship teams in girls' sports in 1984 than any other area school, then look to Romulus High where the Eagles captured titles in softball, volleyball, basketball and track.

A first for Romulus softballers

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Staff Writer

One can only speculate now but ... what if Romulus High had beaten Belleville in the finals of the Class A district softball championship? Would Coach Fred Coleman's Eagles have gone all the way?

Romulus dropped a 5-1 decision to their neighbors which was a key game for Belleville en route to its historic second successive state softball championship.

"It's an interesting theory and speculation," noted Coach Coleman, "and, obviously no one is ever going to know. Our team was a great one this year but Belleville was just greater."

Belleville had on the mound its record-setting hurler, Judy Wisniewski, who tossed a 5-hitter, struck out five and walked one in the crucial showdown against the Romulus' Eagles. Romulus' Roxane Patterson, a legitimate All-State candidate, also gave up five hits, struck out one and issued two walks, but the ball club committed five costly errors which led to its demise.

They're softball champs

With a 29-9 won-lost record, Romulus High girls' softball team won more games than any boys' or girls' teams in the school's history. Coach Fred Coleman's Eagles also were crowned the Metro-West Conference's first champs thanks to the efforts of Tina Justice (manager, first row from left), Misty Kutcher, Laura Wiltsie, Wendy Law and Mary Avery; second row are Mary Savage, Kellie Knight, Tracey DiBenedetto, Lori King, Dawn Proost and Coach Coleman; third row are Tammy Kushner, Roxane Patterson, Jackie Pochmara, Deanna Pochmara, Kris Blair, Michelle Plonka and Kim Doss.

Patterson was recently voted as the Metro West Conference's Most Valuable Player and leads the 7-player Romulus delegation to the elite team.

Also named to the all-conference line-up from Romulus are Tammy Kushner (infield), Deanna Pochmara (outfield), Kris Bair (outfield), Kellie Knight (infield), Tracey DiBenedetto (infield), Kim Doss (outfield) and Laura Wiltsie (outfield).

Patterson, Pochmara and Blair also were recently picked for the All-Region team for Southeastern Michigan and are strong candidates for the all-state.

Coleman's Eagles finished the 1984 campaign with an enviable 29-9 record which is the best in the school's history in any sport.

State belongs to Belleville softball team

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Sports Writer

Belleville was in a festive mood last weekend. For two good reasons: It was Strawberry Festival time and more than 30,000 strawberry-loving fans jammed the local streets.

Secondly, there was Belleville High's superlative girls' softball team, a team which had accomplished what no other girls' softball team in Michigan has in the past, and that was to capture two consecutive Class A state championships.

Invited to ride in the Strawberry Festival Parade, Coach Peggy Curtis's Tigers held a place of honor among the spectators. Rightly so. This team was on the verge of obscurity midway during the 1984 season. Mired in a 9-9 record after suffering a 5-game losing streak, the defending state champs appeared to be "out of it" when suddenly, "explicably" everything began to come together again.

As Coach Curtis had earlier explained: "The credit for turning this team around has to go to Nancy Wisniewski, our assistant coach. I was tired and getting impatient with the team because I knew they could do and play better than they were."

"Suddenly Nancy gave us that psychological lift that every athlete and team needs. She started to put the pieces back together and the team began playing championship ball."

Before the season ended, Belleville strung together 16 successive victories, climaxed with a stirring 3-0 victory over Mt. Clemens' L'Anse Creuse in the finals of the state tournament to capture the 1984 championship.

When the chips were down Curtis and the Tigers went to their senior ace hurler, Judy Wisniewski, who defeated the Mt. Clemens' team 3-0 and posted a record 33 career shutouts. She pitched her way into the Michigan High School Athletic Association record books.

Wisniewski was two shutouts away from tying and three shutouts from owning the national high school record in that category.

"We had learned earlier in the week that someone out west had broken the career record for shutouts and, although it was disappointing, Judy's feat is an accomplishment that will go down in Michigan history," said Coach Curtis.

Judy has 64 career victories which will also be difficult for anyone to break in these parts.

In the state finals, history repeated for the Tigers. They were forced to struggle (as they did last year) in the semi-final round before easily winning in the finals. This year's obstacle was a superb Bay City Central team that forced the issue into extra innings before giving up a 7-5 decision to the champs.

Again it was Wisniewski who went the marathon and won. She survived 10 hits and walked four while striking out none. The Tigers erupted for three runs in the top of the eighth thanks to a pair of Central errors to survive and advance to the finals.

Although the story is well documented in last week's edition of the Associated Newspapers, let's recap the highlights in semi-finals and championships games.

In the semi-finals, Bay City drew blood first, scoring two runs in the bottom of the second, but Belleville edged ahead in the next inning as Carol Wisniewski (Judy's younger sister) got aboard on a fielder's choice. Jill Pence worked losing pitcher Maria Salinas for a walk and Tina Cicotte's sacrifice put runners

Shutout artist

Smiling Judy Wisniewski wrapped up her high school softball career by making history as she led the Tigers to two consecutive state championships. Judy also posted 33 career shutouts, more than any of her peers while chalking up 64 victories on the mound. Eastern Michigan University may have a sister combination on the diamond next Spring as Judy is considering joining older sis, Nancy, at EMU.

on third and first. With two-away, Debbie Sumner singled, scoring two runs (Cicotte had reached second on a stolen base). Michele LaMance's infield grounder was bobbled, allowing Sumner to score.

Central, which had an impressive 35-2 record, didn't lie down and die. It put two more runs on the scoreboard in its third, grabbing the lead again, 4-3. Again Belleville had to fight back. The Tigers tied it in the fifth when LaMance singled home Cicotte who got aboard on an error and moved to second when Sumner also was safe on an error.

Three Belleville runs in the eighth were answered by one Central tally in the final frame.

Belleville scored one run in each of the second, fourth and fifth innings to destroy L'Anse Creuse's dreams of a state title.

The Belleville-bred Peggy Curtis, a product of the Van Buren Schools, has amassed a 57-11 over-all won-lost record over the last two seasons. Her teams also have won the last Suburban 8 Conference and the first Wolverine "A" Conference, district, regional and state championships.

Uncompromising when it comes to discipline and training, the Belleville coach puts her team and players first. "Please don't write about me," she says. "The credit goes to the players and the team."

It is unfortunate, however, that "school is out" when Curtis's teams return from the state playoffs.

"When we get back here, there usually is no one around. But, let me say this, this community really supports us and that's one of the reasons why we're so successful."

State champs

The epitome of success in high school athletics is to win a state title, and Belleville High School's girls' softball team has reached that goal not once but twice in consecutive years. The Tigers reign as the best team in softball thanks to the performances and efforts of Nancy Wisniewski, assistant coach (back row, from left), Nancy Orr, statistician, Tina Cicotte, manager Mia Bridges, Michele LaMance, Laurie Shreckengost, Judy Wisniewski, Jill Pence, Debbie Sumner, and Coach Peggy Curtis; the second row includes players Reiko Snider, Gena Forest, Carol Wisniewski, Karen McMillan, Tammy Richard, Melissa Stafford and Jill Parent.

Glenn runners best in Northwest

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Staff Writer

Westland John Glenn's runners were the best in the Northwest Suburban Conference this season.

And with Coach Ernie Righetti returning, most of the girls who posted an 8-1 won-lost record, the Rockets will probably play the role of favorites a year from now.

ANN PARISH

KAREN OPP

Winning 11 of the conference events with Ann Parish going on to place third in the state in shot put and Karen Opp claiming a sixth place in the 400-meter at state, the Westlanders dominated the track and field scene in 1984.

"We were rated No. 1 throughout most of the campaign," said Righetti who completed his second season as head coach and is a former Wayne Memorial sprint star. "And I would have to say that winning the league and the East Detroit Invitational where 18 schools participated had to be the high points of the season."

Parish picked up her third place medal in the state by placing the shot at the 38 feet, 4½ feet marker. She was also the best in her specialty in the Northwest.

Opp turned in a 58.6 finish sixth at state for the 400 meter run.

Opp and Laura Grazulis shared the Glenn's Track Team's "Most Valuable Player" Award. Laura captured three individual gold medals and also anchored the winning 2-mile relay for the rockets in league competitions. She finished first in the mile, 880-yard run and also the 2-mile, then teamed with Pam Eldridge, Sherry Witner, and Sharon Schoonover to win the 2-mile relay.

Glenn also produced league champions in Diane Cranston (discus), Julie Hysko (high jump), Karen Opp (100-meter and 200-meter dashes), Michele Sanchez (400-meter) and the 800-meter relay with Michelle Sanchez, Angelia Patterson, Tammy Ethridge and Opp.

Rockets cagers have come a long way

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Staff Writer

High school girls' basketball has come a long way.

Just ask George Sommerman at Westland John Glenn, who has been fielding girls' cage teams at Glenn since 1975.

"I can recall when the girls didn't know the technique or fundamentals of the game. They couldn't make a 'dog' or lay-up shot," Sommerman said. "Things have certainly changed."

"In fact, Michigan has become the center attraction in the nation when it comes to girls' high school basketball. The men are pushing the women out of coaching the sport because of the improvement they see," he added.

It wasn't always like that, Sommerman recalls.

"I remember when the girls couldn't shoot and the scores were low, and I mean really low. Now, when teams like Salem and Bentley and Mercy and Ladywood play it's almost standing room only. The games are sold out. That's how good these girls have become and how good the caliber of competition is. And I also would like to think that our teams have been among the area's best."

Sommerman has produced some great players in his nearly two decades as coach, and among his proteges he lists Kim Cesarz, who is presently at Ferris State, and Sophie Castonguay, a standout in '83, who received a full-ride scholarship to Huntington College (Indiana).

Although Sommerman's Rockets posted a winning season in the 1983 campaign — Glenn was 14-7 over-all and finished behind Northwest Suburban Conference co-champs North Farmington and Livonia Franklin — he felt the team could have done better.

"I think I expected them to play better than they did," he commented. "But the victory over an excellent Wayne Memorial team probably was our high point, and we almost knocked off North Farmington, a team we could have and should have defeated."

The Rockets awarded Michele McCullen the MVP after she had finished the season with a 12 points per scoring average and nine rebounds per.

Others who lettered for the Rockets included Castonguay, Julie Tuc-ci, Darla Bergman, Nancy Orulo, Diane Sommerman, Julie Hysko, Sally Lang, Cheryl Dozier, Judy Dundas and Debbie Zesperman.

Westland John Glenn's softballers claimed a half of the Northwest Suburban Conference Championship before going on to capture the Class A District title by whipping Dearborn 9-1. Coach Vic Koos's ball club posted an over-all 19-8 won-lost record and were 7-3 in the league. The Rocket line-up included: Kim Johnston (first row, from left), Barb Barabalas, Kim Schneider, Kelly Watts, Karen Dzvikbek, Tracy Brown, and Jill Runkle; second row are Carol Hall, Cindy Smith, Juli Pucci, Cheryl Dozier, Sally Lang, Kathy Garrett, Tracy Pelek, Missy Lundy and Coach Vic Koos.

Curtis will lose six players through graduation. They include seniors Judy Wisniewski, Michele LaMance (catcher), Debbie Sumner (second base), Pence (center field), Tina Cicotte (right field), Laurie Shreckengost (third base).

The gaping hole created by Wisniewski's departure will have to be filled by Gina Forrest, one of seven players whom Curtis will rely on heavily next season. Other names to watch for are: Tammy Richard (first base), Carol Wisniewski, (yes, there are still more Wisniewskis coming up), Melissa Stafford (left field), Reiko Schneider (outfielder), Karen McMillan (infield) and Jill Parent (infield).

And what about a third straight state title? Impossible, you say?

Tigers win Wolverine swim title

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Staff Writer

Usually freshmen don't win MVP awards. That recognition is reserved mostly for the seasoned and trained veteran senior.

But 14-year-old Karen Kotlarczyk's contributions to Belleville High's swim team couldn't be over-looked and when all of the balloting was completed, Karen received the honor.

The only swimmer to qualify for the state finals from Sam Vicchy's championship team, Karen made it to the state by turning in times of 25.2 and 56.3 for the 50 and 100-yard freestyle events, respectively.

Wolverine 'A' Conference swim co-champs

"She has a tremendous future ahead of her," Coach Vicchy said. "Her credentials as a freshman were impressive and we can't wait to see what she'll accomplish as a senior."

Kotlarczyk helped the Tigers post a 6-1 dual meet conference record which was good enough for a share of the first Wolverine "A" Conference title. Trenton has the other half of the title. Although they had an outstanding season in the league, Belleville had its problems when it ventured out of the league, finishing 7-6 over-all.

"We had a young team and it took us some time to get organized," said Vicchy who has been in charge of the Tiger swim program since 1973. "Watching these young ladies turn into quality swimmers as the season progressed was really something."

No sport demands more than cross country

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Staff Writer

Probably no sport demands more from an athlete than cross country.

It's grueling. And the weak at heart quickly vanish from the scene.

When you're running 3 miles or the 5,000 meters, your body and mind must be prepared. Or you'll be punished.

"It is a difficult sport," said Belleville's Rod Hosman who put together Belleville High's first girls' cross country team. "And an athlete is quick to realize that it is a sport where there are little rewards when it comes to recognition, but if you stick it out, your body and mind will reap the benefits."

Although Belleville posted a 2-5 won-lost season, the Tigers began to put things together in the stretch. Bea Herring emerged from the inaugural Wolverine A campaign as the team's MVP.

Other notables on the team included: Kelly Watts, Leslie Zager, Beth Herring, Amy Zaremba, Susan Zager, Judy Wisniewski, Charlene Knowell, and Mayko Aoki.

Hosman also had charge of the Tiger track team which managed to defeat Lincoln Park and Wyandotte in Wolverine "A" competition and also turned back Northville in a nonleague dual meet.

Although Belleville failed to qualify anyone for state, Felicia Crawford, a senior and member of the team for three years, reached the regional finals for the 100-meter dash. She also was a standout in the 220, 440 and ran a leg on the 880-yard relay team.

For her stellar achievements, Miss Crawford was named as the team's Most Valuable Player.

Others who were standouts in track this season are: Bea and Beth Herring, Judy Widniewski, Charlene Knowell, Colette Rochowiak, Dawn Finlay, Sheila Thompson, Andrea Wilcox, Tammy Varga, Melissa Forrian, Jackie Schant, Melodie Morgan, and Wendy Crawford, Paula Arenatte, Charlene Marviscke, Betty Richendollar and Tracy Nemeth.

Viking track coach believes:

Press should give girls sports more coverage

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Staff Writer

When Inkster High needed a coach to field its girls' track team they called upon Sylvester Mosley.

Mosley, who had retired as the Vikings' head football coach almost a decade ago, knew the trials and tribulations of putting together a winning team in a league dominated by the Highland Parks and River Rouges. He sent a message to the girls "that those who wanted to work hard but receive little reward for their efforts should report for practice."

"The response was beautiful," said Mosley who replaced Jennifer Madison as head coach. (Mrs. Madison wasn't available to coach this season).

"These girls stuck together and worked hard and, although we only had a 2-5 record, I believe the girls didn't regret competing this year."

Two of the Viking standouts are Tracey Elliott and Wanda Baker. They formed the nucleus of the relay teams, picking up Yolanda Baker and Rhonda Reeves to complete the four-some.

Elliott is a notable sprinter who, only a freshman, could become one of the best in the state before her high school career ends.

"We finished fifth in the league," pointed out Mosley, "but you must remember that Highland Park, Rouge and Willow Run are also in this league."

Highland Park captured the 1984 Suburban Athletic Conference Track & Field Championships. Rouge was a close second, followed by Willow Run, Robichaud, Inkster and Ecorse.

The Vikings also had an excellent shot putter in Ricie Floyd and Adrienne Spencer.

"I believe one of the things we miss most in these parts is that the press doesn't give girls the ink and coverage they do the boys sports," Mosley said.

"We recognize that it's traditional for boys' sports to get the coverage, but I think the newspaper people should re-evaluate their position, I'll bet they'll improve their readership."

The Walters' report:

Girls take their sports very seriously

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Staff Writer

Bill Walters believes that all of the ingredients are there for Cherry Hill to have an excellent girls' basketball team. Completing his rookie year as the Spartans' head cage coach, Walters points out that girls' work as hard, if not harder, than boys and take athletics as seriously, if not more seriously, than boys.

"They know they have a lot of learning to do," says Walters, a former Cherry Hill cage star. "But they are closing the gap and, believe me, they are serious in whatever endeavor they commit themselves to."

Cherry Hill wound up with an 8-11 won-lost over-all year and finished 6-8 in the Tri-River Conference where beating Annapolis "had to be the highlight of the league season," says Walters.

"We were down by eight points against them (Annapolis)," Walters recalls, "and our girls scored the last 13 points of the game and we won 33-28. The players showed that they had made tremendous gains in a very short span."

One key player Coach Walters and the Spartans will miss this fall is Zenovia Wolf, a senior forward who accounted for 16.5 points per game and eight rebounds. She was voted the Spartans' "Player of the Year" and named to the All-Conference.

Walters is looking forward to the coming season because he has such notable players returning as Melissa Smiley, whose father happens to be Fred Smiley, former All-American catcher from Northwood Institute.

"Obviously Melissa has heard about and seen a lot of basketball in her life," Walters said, "and, she's an excellent player on her own."

Others who played major roles in the Spartan campaign are: Beverly Keith, a 5-6 guard who was an honorable mention, all-conference player; Angie Tomplison, Betha Woods, Jamie Steertz, Nervette Caldwell, Sandy Cusic, Nicole Damasche, Marion King, Lama Vial, Sue Farhat, Rhonda Garble.

"With most of our players returning, we will have a very competitive team this fall," Walters said.

All about this special issue

This special edition is produced by the Associated Newspapers' editorial and advertising staff and is solely devoted to the local high school girls' sports scene.

We know that you'll find the stories and information interesting.

No matter what one does, one builds memories. In their drive for excellence, young athletes share unique experiences... the ecstasy of winning... the agony of defeat. Today's scrapbook of thoughts will hopefully help them remember and relive the memories of today with their loved-ones of tomorrow. Memories...

"I told you 10 years ago that the newspaper should have a special section devoted for and to girls' sports."

The voice and words belong to George Sommerman, girls' basketball coach at Westland John Glenn. If you have a son who plays sports, you will probably follow his career; if you have a daughter who is in sports, you're a zealous sports fan and you know you'll follow her career."

Ten years ago, girls played basketball as if Dr. James Naismith had just cut the holes out of the peach baskets and had hung them on each end of the gym.

In the past men were reluctant to coach girls' basketball teams. Today they aren't. In fact, according to Sommerman, women are being pushed out of the sport by men coaches who want to coach. "It wasn't like that in the past."

Yes, the girls have come a long way. On the high school level they excel, not only in basketball, but in track, swimming, tennis, cross country, volleyball, gymnastics, softball, golf and soccer.

In the Associated Newspapers circulation area alone, there are more than 75 men and women who coach high school varsity girls teams in 10 sports. And, despite cutbacks caused by dwindling school funds, girls' sports are gaining in popularity algebraically while boys', arithmetically.

Even local and metropolitan newspapers realize that there is a market for girls' and women's sports. Advertisers, whose daughters keep fit thanks to these various programs, are beginning to flock to the news media for space. The 12-page tabloid you are presently looking at represents advertisers who realize this new trend.

If there is one school that stands above all others in this area this year it has to be Romulus. Romulus High captured the Metro-West Conference titles in all four sports — basketball, volleyball, softball and track. And to their teams and coaches: Ron Bayes (basketball), Gail Coleman (volleyball), Fred Coleman (softball) and Al Wilkerson (track) should get the thanks of the entire community. A community of winners isn't hesitant when it comes to supporting their schools. That community approved a 7 mill tax increase and when has any community in this area (or the state for that matter) ever hiked their taxes that much in recent years?

Belleville also should be proud today for the accomplishments of its high school's varsity softball team. Coach Peggy Curtis and her Tigers captured their second consecutive Class A state championship. And no other team has ever boasted that feat in the past.

Wayne's dilemma

Defense is diligent . . . offense ?

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Sports Staff

Kim Fallow got her first taste of coaching a varsity softball team this year.

Fallow liked what she did, but felt that her charges at Wayne Memorial High School could have done better.

"I felt that there was a lot of potential in this year's ball club" the rookie coach said, "but we didn't live up to it, especially at the plate. Our defense was great. We thrived on it . . . but you have to put runs on the scoreboard if you're going to win ball games."

It was scoring, the lack of it, that led to Wayne's 1-0 demise at the hand of natural rival (they're both in the same school district) Westland John Glenn. That shutout ousted the Zebras from the Class A district competition.

Fallow is pleased that Wayne finished with a winning season (9-8) but again disappointed at the 4-8 won-lost mark left in the wake of the Wolverine 'A' Conference's inaugural season.

"It took a while for us to jell as a team," Fallow said, "and it also took some time for us to get to know each and every player. That means a lot."

One player who stood out from the crowd was Cindy Burnie, who batted a hefty .380 on the year which earned for her all-conference recognition. Burnie has lettered three years as a member of the Zebra varsity squad.

Other outstanding performers on the 1984 Wayne varsity club are: Jackie Wallorn, Kerri Lee Brenda Leitz, Liza Jones, Missy Carey, Kathy McIntosh, Dawn Coryer, Missy Prevo, Cathy Carey, and Susie Walton.

Champs almost sat out season

Romulus runners rule first Metro-West track

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Staff Writer

First, the program was going to be cancelled.

Then, when the school administration gave the girls an "O.K.", there wasn't a coach.

So Al Wilkerson stepped forward and "adopted" the track team. The rest is history. Romulus High's girls' thinclads captured the Metro-West Conference championship and finished the season with a 4-1 record.

"There were 26 girls out for the program," said Wilkerson who is noted for his coaching skills in basketball rather than for track. "And when we couldn't find a coach, I took the program."

Some 26 girls were happy he did. Although the Eagles lost a cliffhanging 76-72 dual meet decision to Oak Park earlier in the campaign, they came back with revenge at the conference championships to win the title.

"Our girls were determined to beat Oak Park in the league," Wilkerson said, "and they did it. I think that made this season worthwhile."

Romulus received an outstanding effort from Angie Morrison, a junior, who was named the Eagles' MVP. Morrison made it to the regionals where she placed fifth in the high jump after winning the gold at the league with a leap of 5 feet, 2 inches. She also competed in the long jump, 220-yard dash and the hurdles.

Others who stood out this year during the run for the championship included: Lisa Aloisio, NaShella Bryant, Dawn Casey, Felecia Cortland, Brenda Lidell, Sheryl McKay, Donna McKay, Nikki Rains, Yoland Smith, Tina Talley, Takanta Fowler and Cassandra Lewis.

Team of the future

Wayne loses 2 outstanding thinclads

By TOM MOORADIAN
ANP Staff Writer

A season is as good as what an athlete wishes to put into it. And sacrifice is the name of the game when it comes to athletics.

Five determined girls gave it all they got as members of Wayne Memorial's track team and found gold medals waiting for them at the end of their trials.

Cathy Jacobs, Cassandra Green, Diane Buchalter, Andrea Myricks and Noreen Hamlin emerged from the 1984

Wolverine "A" Conference Track & Field Championships with gold medals in their specialties. Jacobs won the mile run, while Green was the best in the 100-meters and Buchalter finished first for the 200-meters. Myricks was crowned the champ in the shot put event and Hamlin crossed the finish line first in the 400-meter run.

"We had a group of enthusiastic, hard-working young ladies," said Wayne coach Floyd Carter. "Although we didn't manage to qualify anyone for state, this group of athletes are basically underclassmen and they'll be heard from in the years to come."

Trenton won the Wolverine "A" Conference track title with Dearborn Fordson finishing second followed by Wayne Memorial. The conference completed its first year of existence.

Wayne thinclads named Noreen Hamlin as the "Most Dedicated Athlete" while hurdler Renee Gawne was honored as the "Most Improved."

"We had only two seniors in this year's fine group," Carter quickly noted. "If they continue to work hard, we'll be right up there in the next two years."

Wayne Memorial's 880-yard relay team made up of Noreen Hamlin, Deanne Buchalter, Tina Carter and Cassandra Green was considered one of the best in the area.

Among those who also stood out for the Zebras during the 1984 campaign are: Dawn Eldridge, Darleen Sabaugh, Sabrina Moore, Michelle Washington, Darcy Baggson, Jeanna Feruson, Terri Wright, Jeanna Hunter, Marsha Ertman, Dawn Mayberry, Dolores Simonds and Melissa Jeffers.

Volleyball

Where is the recognition?

By Carol Ann Carlson
(Special to the ANP)

The recognition isn't there. The determination to compete and win are.

The Belleville girls' volleyball team has been around for a long time.

The team has had its ups-and-downs, and unfortunately, it has received little recognition from the student body and the papers.

This year has been different though — the "Tuff Puff" game and some excited fans spreading the word helped to fill the stands and encourage the team. This was much appreciated by the team and helped a great deal. This year's Varsity Coach Brenda Pleche also had a lot to do with the success.

Pleche is in her sixth year in the Belleville Volleyball program, starting as a player and now as a coach. There is hope for the program, now that someone is willing to stay and work for the future.

That future began to look very promising this year when seniors Karen Chudzinski, Michelle LaMance and Lisa Shropshire received All-League and All-Area honors.

They won these honors through a voting process at the Wolverine A Conference coaches meeting. At this meeting, each coach could present six players from his or her team that he or she felt were qualified for All-League. Then each coach chose 12 players for the first team. This choice could not include their own players. Then the top 12 vote getters received All-League medals.

Any others who got votes were given Honorable Mention. At this meeting, Karen was voted on to first team, making her All-League, and Lisa and Michelle received Honorable Mention. This is a real accomplishment for these young women and for Belleville.

Another bit of recognition that Karen and Michelle received was that of All-Area Honorable Mention. In this case, the Ann Arbor News requested the names of the best players from coaches in the area, including other leagues. Then the press sports staff chose from those names the best women Volleyball players around. And that included Karen and Michelle.

At the team awards banquet in April, Karen, Michelle and Lisa were surprised with these honors. Their coach and their teammates are very proud of them. It may be delayed and late, but "congratulations Karen Chudzinski, Michelle LaMance and Lisa Shropshire and good luck in the future."

Volleyball queens

Proving that they had the best volleyball team in the Metro-West Conference, Romulus High produced an untarnished 6-0 record to capture the championship. The team was made up of Misty Kutcher (front row, from left), Dawn Proost, Kellie Knight, Kim Doss and Colleen McKay; second row are Deanna Pochmara, Roxane Patterson, Jackie Pochmara, Laura Wiltsie and Mary Avery.

Romulus 'spikers' tough

Although they didn't reach their potential, Romulus High's girls' volleyball team did capture the Metro-West Conference championship.

That's the word from Coach Gail Coleman whose Eagles posted an 18-12-2 over-all and an untarnished 6-0 won-lost record in the league.

"I felt that we could have done better," Coach Coleman said. "The season was a good one. You can't criticize a team that has a perfect league record and has won 18 games, but I really felt that we didn't reach our potential."

"I felt we played our best ball at the Mellus tournament," said Coleman. "It was a tough tournament, and our girls seem to do everything right over there."

One standout throughout the entire season was versatile athlete Roxane Patterson who was named all-league and all-area. Seniors in the Romulus line-up included Kimberly Doss, Kellie Knight and Dawn Proost. Back to form the nucleus next year will be Patterson, Colleen McKay, Misty Kutcher, Mary Avery, Deanna Pochmara, Laura Wiltsie, and Jackie Pochmara.

Fireworks sales on hold

It's time for round two in the battle over the new city ordinance that prohibits the sale of fireworks at temporary stands. The two fireworks dealers who sued the city have lost their first bid to overturn the ordinance, but they'll be back in court Friday.

Donald Kehn and Donald Linn, who have sold fireworks in Romulus during several summer seasons, are suing the city in Wayne County Circuit Court.

The lawsuits are separate, but on June 22 attorneys for the two men appeared together before Judge Robert Colombo Jr. and requested a preliminary injunction barring enforcement of the ordinance.

Colombo denied the request, which could leave the ordinance in force until the cases can be tried, probably late in 1986.

Carl Rubin, the attorney representing Linn, and Stephen Borowski, the attorney representing Kehn, agreed early this week, however, to return together to Colombo's courtroom on Friday for another round of arguments.

A wing with a prayer

Madonna College dedicated its new wing with a prayer Monday.

The college officially unveiled the $4.1 million addition to the Academic Building with dedication ceremonies led by Detroit Archbishop Edmund Szoka. The two-story structure has been in full use since January, but administrators held off the dedication until everything was perfect, said spokeswoman Mary VanAlsten.

"There are always a few finishing touches, you know," she said.

Van Alsten said the wing includes a new recital hall, several more classrooms and faculty offices, and a larger library. Madonna has 3,900 students enrolled.

Hearing on teacher's fate

Carl Korte's future as a Dearborn school teacher will be determined at a hearing before the city's Board of Education July 10. He has been suspended since March 1983, when he was charged with fondling second-grade boys in his Lowrey Elementary School classroom.

The board will decide whether Korte shall be re-instated or fired. He was found not guilty of three charges of second-degree criminal sexual conduct by a Wayne County Circuit Court jury in early March.

The hearing, which may take several days, is tentatively set for the school board's regular meeting room at the Miller Administration Building. Whether it will be open to the public is up to Korte. "I have to talk to my attorney about that," he said.

Livonia's Don Carter is a regular rider on the I-275 bike path.

Built for bikes

I-275 trail has its delights — and critics

By MICHAEL BENCSIK
Free Press Special Writer

It's 45 miles long and eight feet wide, of black asphalt. It's a commuter route for some, but most use it for recreation, as they take the time to enjoy a serene ride along wooded lots and flower-filled meadows, gentle ponds and narrow rivers.

The I-275 bike trail winds through three counties, a smooth roadway for those few in motorized western Wayne who drive machines that don't start with a key.

Just ask Livonia's Don Carter. When the 49-year-old salesman describes a ride along the trail, it sounds like the script for a beer commercial.

"I'll tell you, when I get out here early on a Sunday morning, you wouldn't believe it," Carter says.

"I go to church at 8 and I'm on the trail by 9:15 or 9:30. I ride with my headphones on playing some good Italian classical music like Rossini, and it's paradise. "It doesn't get much better."

CARTER, WHO LIVES less than a mile from the trail's Five Mile Road entrance, says he rides part of the route about four days a week. Sometimes he travels south through Hines Park, then along the freeway to a rest area just north of Michigan Avenue.

Sometimes it's a north and westerly route into the pleasant communities of Plymouth and Northville, a town Carter calls "bike friendly" because of the curb cuts on street corners.

The direction he takes is unimportant, Carter says. He just knows he has to ride and offers a semi-scientific explanation for that craving.

"It's physically addictive," Carter says. "Like jogging, I think it gets some sort of enzyme going inside of you, and you just want more."

IN SOME WAYS, the trail may be a lifesaver for Carter. Six years ago, at age 43, he suffered a heart attack that put him in the hospital for three weeks. His illness threatened a successful career with the Shipley

Co. and, more importantly, he says, threatened his family.

"In my case they weren't sure what caused the heart attack, so they didn't know for sure what to do to prevent another one," Carter says. "They just suggested I give up smoking and find an exercise."

"One of the things you think about when something like that happens to you is your past and what you would do differently with a second chance. I decided I would spend more time with the kids, so I picked up bicycling because it was something everyone could do."

So Carter, his three sons and a daughter, now aged 19 to 25, took to the I-275 trail. "I got the bug," he says.

Carter's children grew up, but he still rides, mostly alone now, his Walkman radio wired into his riding helmet.

In the six years since his heart attack, Carter says, he has sometimes felt pain in his chest and the terror that goes with it. The prescribed response is to place a nitroglycerin tablet into his mouth.

"I've had to do that at home, in the office, in customer offices, but never once on the bike trail," Carter says.

AS MUCH AS he is a fan of the bike path, Carter is also a critic when it comes to its maintenance.

On a recent sunny evening, Carter rode the trail while pointing out raspberry bushes, a place to pick apples, a pleasant pond with a fishing dock, ducks and swans, and a place to get a drink of water.

At the same time he nodded toward weeds overgrowing the trail, narrowing it to a single lane. Carter says that by summer's end, the path may be choked off entirely in spots, and he complains about the lack of weed-cutting and pavement-sweeping.

Although the Wayne County Road Commission does the maintenance work for the expressway and the $3.6 million trail, trail maintenance is only done by order of the state Department of Transportation.

New Ann Arbor school chief: He's a listener

By NANCY ROSS
Free Press Staff Writer

It isn't the kind of welcome a new school superintendent hopes for.

When Richard Benjamin comes to his new post in Ann Arbor next week, he'll be heading a district that recently rejected a millage proposal and now must balance the budget and negotiate with employee groups in the wake of that defeat.

But Benjamin reacts with an aplomb colleagues say is characteristic.

The 42-year-old educator — who has been described as "people-oriented," "a listener" and "the guy with finesse" — says the millage failure is a message that needs to be heeded.

Richard Benjamin has been described as "people-oriented."

"I think what the community is saying is that they're willing to spend money on the schools, but they just want to be certain it's being spent in the best possible way," the new superintendent said.

Benjamin said he will ask the school board — with help from the state education department — to mount a systematic survey to learn exactly why voters turned down the request.

THE PROPOSAL asked for 0.8 mills for five years, beginning this year, and an additional 1.1 mills for four years, beginning the following year. The additional money would have helped compensate for a projected $1.4 million deficit in the district's $57 million 1984-85 budget and for anticipated deficits in the next four years.

Benjamin suspects the survey will show that some voters were concerned about the amount of money, others about the duration of the millage. But many people, he believes, are holding onto their purses until they find out what the school district administration intends to do about such problems as declining enrollment.

Donn Werling at Fair Lane, where he is directing the historical renovation.

The keeper of Fair Lane's legacy

By MICHELE CHANDLER
Free Press Staff Writer

With noses and tiny palms pressed against the windows, a group of grade schoolers peered inquisitively inside a wooden playhouse on the grounds of the Henry Ford Estate-Fair Lane.

Inside, estate director Donn Werling crouched to squeeze through a five-foot-tall doorway leading to a miniature kitchen, fashioned with a three-foot-tall potbellied stove, a fireplace with bricks half the size of a postcard, a knee-high wooden icebox, dishes the diameter of a lemon slice set upright on the shelves of a small china cabinet, and even a six-inch-tall vase on the child-sized dining room table.

The youngsters outside looked confused, wondering how two grown-ups got inside the inviting, white-shingled playhouse, and why no one else could get inside.

Werling quickly pointed out a few more miniature furnishings in the two-room playhouse — including a foot-pedal sewing machine and tiny wooden chairs.

HENRY FORD commissioned the petite building in 1924 for his grandchildren and their friends. The playhouse, which opened to the public last October, is now rented out for children's parties and tours.

After the brief tour, Werling replaced his light blue sun visor and, with his characteristic rapid, long strides, headed out the front door and past the schoolchildren to show a visitor other parts of the historic, 70-acre estate that was home to Henry and Clara Ford from 1915 to 1947.

Werling became director of Fair Lane last year, after the University of Michigan Regents, who own the estate, decided to restore Ford's home to look as it did in the early 1920s.

Werling had spent the previous nine years in Evanston, Ill., where he headed restoration of a historic lighthouse and revamped grounds designed by noted landscape architect Jen Jensen.

With a doctorate in natural resources and a specialty in environmental education from the University of Michigan, Werling, 38, was comfortable with his assignment to head the restoration of Fair Lane's many gardens and a grassy 25-acre meadow at Fair Lane that was also designed by Jensen.

Werling said that although he had toured Fair Lane while a U-M doctoral candidate, he didn't know much about the famous auto magnate when he arrived in Dearborn.

TO LEARN MORE, he explored books in the collection of the Edison Institute, the non-profit group that owns and operates Henry Ford Museum and Greenfield Village and is directing Fair Lane's renovation.

As Fair Lane is restored to its original splendor, Werling hopes to draw more tourists — especially those who have visited Greenfield Village, a collection of Ford's favorite buildings and inventions set in Dearborn about a mile from Fair Lane.

With more tourist dollars and grants, more renovation projects can be completed at Fair Lane.

"We hope to make this a major tourist attraction," said Werling. "There's a lot here for people to see."

"Fair Lane now has the promise of being a showcase. We've taken away the tacky look it had . . . but the home is in the state of having a long way to go before (we can) say it's a Little girl's death: Accident — or killing?

By RODDY RAY
Free Press Staff Writer

Whether Tia DeNeve's death two months ago today was accidental or intentional, it was a sad ending to a sad life of 3½ years.

Her life and death were detailed last week in a small courtroom in Wyandotte during a preliminary examination of a young steelworker accused of causing her death.

Tia was the daughter of Timothy and Tammy DeNeve, who met as teenagers in the summer of 1979 at the Monroe County Fair when Tammy asked Timothy for a cigaret. They were married two months later.

Before Tia was a year old, doctors said she had an 80 percent hearing loss and told her parents to prepare themselves for life with a handicapped child.

During the winter of 1981, when the three lived in an uninsulated farmhouse in Carleton with no running water, Tia fell down two stairs, hit her head and went into a seizure, her father said. She underwent tests for about 10 days at Mott Children's Hospital in Ann Arbor and was sent home.

Tia had more seizures and spent weeks at hospitals before she was diagnosed in December 1982 as having a brain disease that impaired her balance. She couldn't talk. She fell often and couldn't catch herself. One fall led to four stitches in her chin.

THE DeNEVES split up about two years ago, and they drew up informal papers regarding Tia's custody. She lived mostly with her father, who held various jobs in Florida and Michigan, and for shorter periods she lived with her mother.

She was living with Tammy DeNeve and her boyfriend in a Wyandotte apartment when she died in the pre-dawn hours of April 28. An autopsy report said she died of multiple blunt-force impacts to the abdomen. A major vein and artery were torn, and about a quarter of her blood supply was removed from her abdominal cavity.

The boyfriend, Robert Leonard Sage, a 24-year-old laborer at Great Lakes Steel, is in jail awaiting trial on a charge of second-degree murder stemming from Tia's death.

During Sage's preliminary examination last week, the prosecution played a tape of one of three statements Sage made to police after the child's death. He told police that he'd put Tia atop his refrigerator on the night of April 27 "because I just played with her that way. I played with my own child that way . . . Tia liked being taller than you."

Tia DeNeve, in a family photograph.

Sage said he turned to get a cigaret he'd lit earlier and heard "thump, thump."

When he turned back toward the refrigerator, he said, she was lying partly on the floor and partly on a garbage bag, which was about two-thirds full.

The tape recording was of the second statement Sage gave police; he hadn't mentioned the refrigerator in the first statement. When he was asked on tape about the change in his story, he started sobbing. "I didn't want to believe" she died "because of that," he said.

"You have to look at the total findings of the autopsy. If a child had one bruise to the abdomen, that's consistent with one fall . . . but there were multiple bruises in multiple places."

BUT TWO medical experts called by the prosecution said it was unlikely the child's injuries could have been caused by a fall from a refrigerator, noting that there were at least three bruises in a single patch on Tia's abdomen.

"I cannot think of how they could have happened at the same time," said Dr. Marilee Frazer, an assistant Wayne County medical examiner.

Under questioning by Sage's attorney, John Burns, Frazer hesitantly said that "in unusual circumstances it would be possible" that all three blows to Tia's abdomen could have happened simultaneously if she fell and struck something — perhaps pop bottles in or under the garbage bag.

But Frazer said repeatedly that the autopsy showed none of the usual injuries sustained by a person who falls, such as cuts, scrapes or fractures.

Dr. Barbara Lucas, a child abuse expert who had examined the medical and autopsy records, said it was significant that of 18 bruises on Tia's body, 16 were fresh and many were on non-bony areas other than the abdomen, such as her inner and outer thighs and the front of her right leg.

"You have to look at the total findings of the autopsy," she said in a heated exchange with the defense attorney. "If a child had one bruise to the abdomen, that's consistent with one fall . . . but there were multiple bruises in multiple places."

SAGE'S ATTORNEY noted after the hearing that Lucas didn't make the distinction between bruises that may have happened that night and bruises that may have happened before.

Frazer, who was not in the courtroom during Lucas' testimony, said later, "I can't agree with what (Lucas) said. I indicated specifically that many of the injuries were not fresh — some were up to a week old . . . Based on my examination, in my mind there's no indication of chronic child abuse. I don't care what anyone else says."

Timothy DeNeve, 24, sat next to his ex-wife, Tammy, 21, during the exam.

Sage, who has a slight build with thick, curly black hair and a moustache, sat quietly beside his lawyer. His left eye was swollen shut — an injury his family said he received when other inmates beat him up at the Wayne County Jail.

In the past, he has been convicted on four misdemeanor charges of possession of drugs, resisting an officer, assault, and malicious destruction of property.

TIA'S DEATH has created a deep rift between the families of Sage and DeNeve. As the families sat on opposite sides of the waiting room in the Wyandotte District Court building before the examination last week, one woman whispered as she looked at the other group: "See what we're up against? A bunch of slime."

And during the six-hour examination, while some members of each family were in the lobby, police had to rush out of the courtroom to quell a shouting match. "You assaulted me!" yelled a member of one family at a member of the other, as participants and observers turned to look.

Timothy DeNeve picketed the Wyandotte Police Department with his family and friends early last month, calling for someone to be arrested for Tia's death. During the investigation, Sage turned himself in when his aunt told him that he was wanted by police.

SAGE'S FAMILY insists that if Tia's injuries weren't caused by her fall from the refrigerator, the wrong person is sitting in jail.

"He loved Tia," said Sage's mother, Shirley. "He was teaching her to eat with utensils. She was like a little Helen Keller — she ate with her hands. He was teaching her to take a few steps at a time."

Sage's family says Timothy DeNeve railroaded their son by putting pressure on police to make an arrest, and that Sage already has been found guilty in the press.

"How can the newspapers say this was a beating?" asked Robert James Sage, his father. "It doesn't say anything in the papers about foul play or an accidental death. Everything says beating right off the bat. He was hung before he had a chance."

Sage is scheduled to be arraigned in district court Tuesday.

Ann Arbor's K-12 population has dropped from 19,787 students in 1972-73 to 14,461 in 1982-83, but unlike most Michigan school districts, Ann Arbor has not closed schools. Will those drastic measures become necessary?

"I don't know," Benjamin said. "It really has a lot to do with what the objectives of the community and board are. Sometimes, if you focus on sheer efficiency, it would lead to a closing; other times the focus is on something else."

In Ft. Worth, Tex., where Benjamin started in 1981 as assistant superintendent of planning and then became an associate superintendent, he saw nine schools — including his own children's — shut down.

Before that, he went through seven closings during his five years with Lansing Public Schools.

"I GENERALLY see school closings as a tool to accomplish something else," he said. "If you just sit down and say this school should be closed or not closed, without goals, it's just an emotional, difficult issue. The board needs to establish some priorities of what they want to accomplish. If school closings can be a tool in that, everyone understands it better if they know the priorities."

Even with goals, school closings are difficult, he conceded. "You don't keep it from becoming emotional, but what you do is prepare the board to make this decision very, very openly with lots of involvement and lots of information."

Involvement is a key concept to Benjamin.

In Ft. Worth, he instituted a "site-based management" plan, shifting much of the district's decision-making from central administration to the building level. Benjamin said he wants to see something similar in Ann Arbor, but realizes that the district is just emerging from "a round of very severe decentralization."

"Great numbers of decisions were decentralized — perhaps too much," Benjamin said. "Take curriculum, for example. If people can teach different things at different schools, it's not seen as a good thing. But given common goals and standards, with each building deciding how to implement them — that's how decentralized decision making works."

PARENTS, AS well as staff and administrators, should help make the decisions, Benjamin says. But he's also aware that giving that many people a say can create complications, especially in a community of highly educated people who may have definite opinions about how things should be done.

"People not only know what they want to see, but also how they want to see it done," he said. "It's important in my role to remind people that the staff is really paid to consider the how."

Some 70 percent of Ann Arbor's citizens have no children enrolled in the schools — a statistic common in many districts, which means school officials have to work extra hard to convince people the schools are worth their tax dollars.

Benjamin said Ann Arbor has done well so far. "The recreation, summer and adult programs all mean that for a long time Ann Arbor has conceived schools as a part of the community, not just where the children go during the day."

But, he added, "I think there's another dimension to the community that has not been addressed specifically in Ann Arbor — partnership with the business community."

In Ft. Worth, he helped work out an adopt-a-school Involvement is a key concept to Richard Benjamin, new superintendent of the Ann Arbor schools.

"The recreation, summer and adult programs all mean that for a long time Ann Arbor has conceived schools as a part of the community."

program with local businesses, and he has already talked to the Ann Arbor Chamber of Commerce about setting up a similar plan.

THE IDEA, he said, is to bring business leaders into the schools to lecture to classes, work with individual students or help teachers develop curriculum that teaches students about the business world.

During three trips to Ann Arbor between his selection and his starting date, Benjamin has learned plenty about the community's concerns for its schools. His thoughts on some of those issues:

• Discipline in schools. "From my observations and interviews, there may be some problems there, not system-wide, but sort of isolated. The most widespread concern is sort of double-sided. There seems to be some evidence that minority students receive more, and more frequent, discipline. But that's counterbalanced by the perception that some people are reluctant to discipline minority students."

• Desegregation plans. "There has been real interest in taking a look at what needs to be done, and there are emerging some identifiable schools . . . that are of concern to many groups of people. I have a feeling that the issue in Ann Arbor is really pupil achievement . . . more looking at ways for all kids to reach high achievement than simply achieving ethnic balance in terms of numbers."

• Criticism of the schools or school policies. "People who complain are often doing us a favor. We ought to listen. (In a memo to administrators), I reassured them that some people are unreasonable, but we should listen to them and make sure they know the reasons for a particular decision and also that they know how to appeal." Planning. "I'd like to be sure that we get time to plan with participation. It's just easy for any smaller group of people to sit down and put down some goals and feel like a plan exists. What's important is not that plan, but the process of planning."

"Average school districts just make a plan and go on and do it, but Ann Arbor has a chance to build on such excellence. If we can really listen to people who have high expectations and build them into the process, we can prepare the kids for a future we can't even imagine." Ann Arbor's private schools. "The existence of a network of good private schools helps. It pushes standards higher and gives a good basis for comparison. It also makes the community relax. Most people want to know they're doing the best for their children. If they don't have a choice, they wonder if they're doing the best they could."

After a year-long, nationwide search for someone to replace retired superintendent Harry Howard, Ann Arbor has high hopes for its new school superintendent. Too high perhaps?

"I think there might be a tendency for expectations to really jump, and mine are up there, too," Benjamin said. "People are going to have to realize they're going to have to do what they've always had to do — help me and help the school district. They can't just sit back and say, 'Well, the search is over.' The schools don't run well just on the back of the superintendent."

"I think we all need to get (expectations) under control and know that good things in education happen gradually."

getting it straight

To ensure accuracy, the Free Press will correct in this space any factual error that may occur in our news columns.

A June 21 Detroit Free Press story about a lake in an Ann Arbor-area gravel quarry stated that Peter G. Meier, a professor in the University of Michigan School of Public Health, had tested the quarry water. The story said Meier and his students rated the water quality at 83 to 85 on a scale of 100 points.

Meier actually has not tested the water in the quarry. The water quality rating actually refers to water in the Huron River near the quarry.

Police chief acquitted, but future's uncertain

By JOHN FLYNN
Free Press Staff Writer

Robert Aeillo isn't sure if he wants his job back as police chief of Chelsea.

"If I thought I could go back with no animosity — and there's none on my side — sure, I'd like to have the job back," said Aeillo. "But I haven't had contact with the people downtown in five months, and I'm just leaving the whole matter in my attorney's hands."

Chelsea attorney Peter Flintoft said he was contacted by Aeillo's attorney, Steven Jentzen, after a 12-person jury acquitted Aeillo of embezzling $464 from the village's parking ticket fund.

"I may meet with him (Jentzen), but there hasn't been any discussion on whether Aeillo will get his job back," said Flintoft.

Aeillo, meanwhile, is still celebrating. He said the feeling he had was "unexplainable" when the jury found him not guilty last week after 3½ hours of deliberation in Circuit Judge Patrick Conlin's courtroom.

THE VERDICT ended five months of turmoil for the 19-year law enforcement veteran, who was removed as chief in February after he was arrested and charged with embezzling the parking ticket money.

Aeillo contends he was suspended without pay and replaced by an acting chief, Sgt. Leonard McDougall. But Flintoft said Aeillo was fired by former Village President Jack Markel.

"There's a conflict on that issue," said Jentzen. "We hope to settle it in as amicable a way as possible. It's been an unfortunate situation."

After what he has gone through, Aeillo said, waiting another week or two to learn whether he'll be returning as Chelsea chief or looking for another law enforcement job is no big deal.

"I've waited five months. It'll all work out. But I'm going to remain in police work because that's all I know," said Aeillo, who became Chelsea chief in 1979, then saw his life turned upside down following the embezzlement charge. A conviction could have meant a maximum 10-year prison term and $5,000 fine.

JENTZEN SAID the not guilty verdict swung on Aeillo's "excellent job" on the witness stand. Aeillo admitted that his accounting procedures for the parking ticket fund had been less than perfect, but he apparently convinced the jury that he had not stolen the missing money.

"Fortunately, I had an attentive jury," said Aeillo. "They listened very carefully while I explained to them what had happened. It was the first time that I had been given the opportunity to tell my side of the story."

"I'm not an accountant," he said. "I kept the ledgers for the parking ticket money, but I found out later from other chiefs in the area that they never handled money."

The $464 disappeared in 1983. The shortage averaged about $40 a month.

Aeillo said there were as many as 22 people who could have handled the money. He testified that he had launched an internal investigation after he learned that the fund was short, but said he was arrested and charged before he could complete the investigation.

Aeillo became a suspect after Flintoft informed the Washtenaw County Prosecutor's Office in January that there were problems with money handled by the chief.

PROSECUTORS ALLEGED that Aeillo had lowered amounts paid for individual tickets when entering the payments into the ledger book. He was charged with pocketing the difference, usually amounting to $3 a ticket.

Aeillo, 48, a Detroit native, began his police career with the New York Central Railroad's Detroit office. He then spent 12 years with the Washtenaw County Sheriff's Department, rising to commanding officer before becoming Chelsea chief.

The experience of being on the other side of justice taught him compassion, said Aeillo.

"There's a lot of people I've locked up in the past (that) if I were to lock up today, I would have more compassion for. I know what it's like to be fingerprinted and photographed and go through the system," he said.

Romulus school superintendent William Bedell inspects water damage outside the boys locker room at South Junior High School. "We discovered that the way to sell millages these days is to find out who's going to vote yes," Bedell said. "You've got to find out who's going to vote yes no matter what happens, and you get them to the polls."

A crafty corps got out 'yes' vote in Romulus

By RODDY RAY
Free Press Staff Writer

When Dr. William Bedell left the Livonia school system to become superintendent in Romulus four years ago, it was as if the captain of the Love Boat hired on with the Titanic.

"Livonia was a fairly wealthy school district," he said. "People there were upwardly mobile, and we didn't have a lot of trouble getting millages passed."

Romulus is a different story. Its per capita income is about one-third less than Livonia's; its jobless rate about two times greater.

That situation, along with poor relations among teachers, administrators and the community, has made it pretty tough for Bedell to get voters to pass a millage.

WHEN IT rained in Romulus this past school year, seven years after the last millage increase, water poured into some classrooms. School days, once six hours, were five, and there were no elementary art, music or physical education programs. Two librarians and four counselors served about 5,500 students.

"The whole place was a pit," Bedell said. But the 50-year-old captain managed to keep his ship afloat — and he used some crafty seamanship to do it.

Earlier this month, Romulus voters approved a 7.5 mill increase, which will pump $2 million a year more into the ailing system for the next three years. The increase, 6 mills for operating and 1.5 for maintenance, makes Romulus one of the most heavily taxed districts in the state.

THE MILLAGE increase might be surprising, considering it was passed in a district where:

- The teachers, most of whom live outside the district, struck the school for weeks in 1975 and again in 1980.

- Administrators slashed the teachers' salaries 22 percent in 1982 and hired an attorney, who tied up the matter in court long enough for the system to reach sounder financial footing.

- The administrators closed one-third of the buildings, including an all-black elementary school in 1982.

- The teachers' union last year put up a billboard showing a big apple with a screw sticking out of it. "Our reputation was beginning to be something like a cuckoo's nest," Bedell said.

WHY, THEN, did voters pass such a large millage this time?

"We discovered that the way to sell millages these days is to find out who's going to vote yes," he said. "You've got to find out who's going to vote yes no matter what happens, and you get them to the polls."

That wasn't Bedell's own idea, but he was responsive to it because increases had been voted down 11 times in his four years as superintendent.

He had tried to link the millage vote to asbestos ceiling problems. (The schools were required to replace some of their asbestos ceilings after the material was suspected of causing cancer.) The voters demurred.

He tried technical explanations of the state aid formula. That appeal failed, too.

But the elections in which millage proposals didn't pass pointed up a trend that was key to the latest, successful election. In every voter turnout previously, the number of "no" voters was about 1,400.

THAT MEANT all Bedell and his corps had to do was make sure more than 1,400 "yes" voters went to the polls.

Then came step two.

"We got computers involved, and we started making lists of parents and voters," he said.

"Then we went to bus drivers, the teachers, the PTA — we went to six different groups — and we sat them down, got coffee and doughnuts, and told them, 'Go through every one of those lists and cross out the people you know are not going to vote.'"

The groups were then told to put a p — for "positive" — by those they thought would vote "yes."

"When we got done," Bedell said, "we had a list of 2,700 people that six groups had said were pretty sure to vote yes. We knew that if we could get more than 1,400 of those 2,700 out to the polls, we could pass the millage," he said.

STEP THREE. Names not designated with a p got a general mailing, but the preferred voters — the "yes" voters — were blitzed with mail and phone calls reminding them to show up at the polls June 11.

"We called everybody on that list May 30 and 31," Bedell said. "The schools called everybody on the list. The Sunday night before the election we called everybody on the list, and then the day of the election we called them three times."

When the votes were counted, 1,434 voters turned down the millage increase designated for general operating expenses — but 1,510 voters approved it. And although 1,383 voters said "no" to the maintenance increase, 1,583 said "yes."

If Bedell could have gone about it differently and still have been successful, he said, he would have done that.

This fall, he said, school days again will be six hours. Elementary school students again will have music, art and physical education classes. Classrooms will be dry, and two computer instructors will be hired and trained. And that's only the beginning.

The superintendent says his actions have not made him loved by all. But in at least one sense, the decisions came easily.

"At this point, I didn't have much to lose," he said. "The g----- place had gone to hell."

The I-275 bicycle path has delights — and critics

The department's local maintenance engineer, Ernie Savas, admits it has been a while since any maintenance was done.

"It (the bike trail) was last cut a couple of years ago," he says, "although I think some of the cities along certain sections have taken care of it themselves."

Savas says that of the $18.8 million the transportation department will pay Wayne County for road services this year, none of the money was designated for grass-cutting or pathway-sweeping along the bike trail.

However, because of complaints from bike riders, the department has ordered a 12-mile section from I-96 south to I-94 to be cut sometime this summer, Savas says.

AS CARTER took his recent ride on the trail he passed dozens of other bikers, but few in groups of two or more and none looking like they belonged to a particular bike club.

Mike Walden, president of the Michigan Bike Federation, says there is a reason for that.

"I don't ride the trail, nor does anyone from the club I belong to or any other bike club, for that matter," he says.

Walden claims the trail is unsafe and poorly designed, primarily because riders are forced to cross each road that intersects with I-275 — in many cases without benefit of traffic signals.

"It is a traffic engineering problem," Walden says. "Originally the path had some 90-degree turns. The big problem now is to cross over the surface streets without benefit of a traffic light. It is not safe, and it is an inconvenience to come up off the path."

"What they should have done is drop culverts (underpasses) in there so they (bikers) wouldn't have had to come up to the street."

"My segment of the bike community believes bicycle routes are the way to go and not bike paths — there is no way to maintain them and no room for two-way traffic."

"RUNNERS ARE another problem," Walden says, "as well as junk on the path and no way to clear snow in the winter."

Bikes at rest. Enthusiasts want to get them off the sidewalks and onto the bike trail.

But Carter doesn't mind the runners, or other bike riders on slower machines, or riders with young children, or the children on roller skates.

Carter nods hello as he passes each one. The bike path appears to be a trailway of friendly types. He did take exception, though, to a fellow a couple of years ago who was trying out his motorcycle on the path at an estimated 70 miles per hour.

But, as Carter explains, even that incident is part of his enjoyment of the trail.

"You never know what is going to happen out here," he says. "It's an adventure I truly enjoy."

Going along for the ride

Bicyclists interested in learning to ride with groups or looking to meet other bike riders are welcome at Wednesday night rides sponsored by three area bike clubs.

Each of the outings is open to novice riders as well as more conditioned bicyclists.

For instance, The Cycling Saddlemen is a Dearborn-based group that has had a Wednesday night ride for 15 years. The group of 25 to 40 riders meets at Ford Field at 7 p.m. and departs on a 12 or 25 mile ride, depending on riders' abilities.

Either of the loop routes through Dearborn take about 90 minutes to complete, said club president Edie Bozanich. All riders return to the starting point. For more information call Bozanich at 581-1341.

THE DOWNRIVER CYCLING CLUB departs from the Flat Rock Dairy Queen on Telegraph Road at 6:30 p.m. with a group of five to 30 riders.

Club president Tom Ferstle said the group has been meeting for three years and rides anywhere from 15 to 25 miles, depending upon the people who show up and their abilities.

Ferstle said the group also hosts easy-going Saturday family rides and a faster Sunday ride for more experienced bikers.

For more information about the club call Ferstle at 285-1900, weekdays between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m., or write the club at Box 508, Flat Rock 48134.

THE NEWEST Wednesday bike route in the area is one that began last fall in Livonia and is sponsored by the Wolverine Sports Club.

Gary Nix is the ride leader for about a dozen people who leave the Seven Mile and Farmington Road intersection at 7 p.m. for a 20 mile ride of about 90 minutes.

The ride is the third Wednesday night bike event in the metro area sponsored by the Wolverine club, which has a membership of about 500 people statewide. The club was formed in 1896.

Dale Hughes, the club manager, said about 80 percent of the club members are "tourist riders" and the other 20 percent are competitive riders.

"We've produced three world champions, eight Olympic team champions and 54 U.S. national champions — all from this club and all coached by Mike Walden," Hughes said.

The Wolverine Club has information about upcoming rides and races taking place almost every day of the week. You can reach club members by calling 547-0050 anytime.

Start anywhere, and find cool woods, orange sunsets

By MICHAEL BENCISK
Free Press Special Writer

Dozens of times you may have zipped by the bike trail along I-275, wondering where it went and what you might see if you took a ride.

Well, wonder no more. We can answer those questions for you. But remember, a sunset's orange arms stretching across a soft pond, or the shaded coolness of a deep clump of woods, are experiences best felt for yourself.

The I-275 bike trail is 45 miles long, running from Post Road in Monroe County to Meadowbrook Road in Oakland County. There are many more miles of bike paths shooting out east and west from the trail, depending upon where you exit.

To the uninitiated, some advice: Don't try the entire trail in one day. And, most importantly, remember that you have to go back to where you started. That means if you pedal 20 miles north on the trail, you are going to have to pedal 20 south to get back to your starting point.

If you took such a trip with a strong wind out of the south, the first 20 miles could be fun, and the 20 back agonizing.

No bicycle service centers are along the route, so make sure your bike is in good working order.

Detours off the trail at a number of spots will take you to nearby restaurants, but to save time, it's best to bring your own food and drink.

THERE ARE 31 access points to the trail along the 45-mile stretch. Seven of them include parking lots, which is helpful if you are driving your bike to the trail.

You can begin anywhere. But as a suggestion to those who have never been on the path, a good place to start is Edward Hines Drive in the Wayne County-owned Rouge parkway.

This is the center of one of the most picturesque areas along the trail. Visitors can park in nearby lots and along Edward Hines Drive.

Once parked and on your bike, you can take off on trips to the four compass points. There is a sidewalk and good shoulder roadway running east and west along Edward Hines Drive, so you are not limited to the designated I-275 bike path.

If you head east, you'll be traveling on Hines Drive through the parkway all the way back to Ford Road in Dearborn. Although the grass goes uncut in many areas and some rest stops have been closed after incidents of vandalism, it is still a pleasant ride. You'll pass by the edge of Newburgh and Nankin Lakes and dozens of picnic areas, the toboggan hill east of Middlebelt Road, and the Hawthorne Valley and Warren Valley golf courses.

If you head west along Hines Drive, you will swing north, crossing M-14 as the parkway bikepath also becomes the I-275 trail. Once you are north of M-14, you can follow the I-275 trail to Oakland County or continue west along the Hines Drive path toward Northville.

IF YOU CHOOSE the Oakland County route, you will soon pass Five Mile Road and gradually progress up the mile roads as you ride parallel to the expressway.

At Eight Mile Road you may want to make a left and go west for a couple of miles to Mayberry State Park, a pleasant picnicking and nature area. Inside the park there are three miles of bike path.

If you decide to stay on the main trail, you can get a cool drink of water just past Eight Mile Road on the edge of the trail.

There, in front of the modern, triangular Church of the Nazarene, is a drinking fountain. Church custodian Leon Murray says the church was built three years ago and the drinking fountain was installed last year as a community service.

A mile up the road, a couple of unnamed roadside residents seem to expect travelers to show their benevolence. The pair of horses hang their heads over the wooden corral fence and gladly grab at anything from fruit to nuts — and even an occasional plastic bike handle.

The trail comes to its northern end at Meadowbrook Road. If you want to hopscotch some roads westward, you can make your way to Kensington Park in a dozen miles.

GOING BACK to Hines Drive and I-275, as you detour west around M-14 you can stay on the parkway bike path and travel directly into Northville, a pleasant little town with fine parks and bike-friendly street corners.

But on the way there you will have to climb "heartbreak hill," just past Six Mile Road. Just remember when it gets tough going up, the ride down is a pleasant one.

As you cruise through the eastern end of town, stop next to the Ford Motor Co. valve plant on Main Street to see a giant waterwheel and adjacent duck pond. Around the bend, you also can grab a drink of water from a fountain next to the river.

There are a couple of dairy barns in town for ice cream fanciers and for connoisseurs of the cool and creamy, Guernsey Farm Dairy is just up Novi Road past Eight Mile.

TAKING THE southbound route from Edward Hines, there are more than 30 miles of interesting sights between there and the southern end of the I-275 trail. Again, the best way to see things is to get off the main roadway and do some side road traveling.

You could decide to take Hines Drive west to Northville Road, then drop down south to Plymouth, a town that's unusual in Wayne County because of the major park in the middle of the downtown district.

Along the way you'll pass calm Wilcox Lake, home to several swans and ducks and a new fishing pier.

Traveling south along the I-275 path itself, you can make your way to the large Lower Huron Metro Park by following the interchange around I-94, parallel with Hannon and Northline roads, to Huron River Drive. The park is complete with swimming pool, nature trails, golf course and playground.

If you're interested in obtaining a map of the I-275 bike trail, its access points and cutoff roads, call the Michigan Department of Transportation, Traffic and Safety Division, at 569-3993, ext. 70, weekdays 7:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m.

Kayak touring — it's the latest wave

By RALPH PAULK
Free Press Staff Writer

Kayaking is better known in the white-water rivers of Wyoming, Montana and Colorado, but this weekend, Michiganders will have a chance to become familiar with a form of the sport.

A touring, or recreational, kayaking clinic will be conducted Saturday at Lakeport State Park, eight miles north of Port Huron on M-25, from 10 a.m. to sunset.

The free clinic will be conducted by Stanley and Emma Chladek, of Bloomfield Hills, former European kayaking champions who emigrated to the United States from Czechoslovakia in 1965. Their daughter Unlike Olympic-style kayaking, touring kayaking is not done in white water.

Dana, a student at Dartmouth College, is a member of the U.S. kayaking team.

The Chladeks will give demonstrations and lessons in kayaking techniques.

UNLIKE OLYMPIC-STYLE kayaking, touring kayaking is not done in white water. Touring kayaks are operated by pedal and controlled by rudder or overhead kites.

Canoeing and white-water kayaking demonstrations also will be offered.

Clinic participants should be able to swim and should wear life preservers, the Chladeks said.

After 25 years of kayaking, the Chladeks are hoping to interest more people in touring, which is still in its infancy in America. The sport was introduced in New England in the mid-1970s, Chladek said.

"There are a lot of people in Michigan who like kayaking," Chladek said, "but there are few places nearby that they can do it and even less places where they can white-water kayak. Touring is the best kind of kayaking available in the area."

Keeper of Fair Lane preserves Ford past

showcase," said Werling. Since he took over, Werling has convinced several local organizations to volunteer their time to help get Henry Ford's home in shape.

So far, the major renovation projects include restoring the Fords' second-floor bedroom.

Volunteer weavers are using old photos to help them create a replica of a white wicker bed, which was placed on the second-floor sun porch. A group of quilters is making a duplicate of the quilt that decorated the wicker bed.

The Garden Club of Dearborn held an afternoon tea last year and raised money to buy peony plants — Clara Ford's favorites — which were planted and bloomed this year beside the playhouse.

And the Kiwanis Club of Dearborn helped paint the weather-worn trim around the windows in Fair Lane's Power House, which houses a collection of generators that provided power to the Ford's main house. A bust of Henry Ford was unveiled in the Power House during a ceremony last week.

"They were lovers of nature and patrons of garden art," Werling said of the Fords. "They did not collect high, fine art. The art that was great was on the outside. That's where their values were. The fact that they had 25 gardeners and only five house servants says it right there."

Making replicas of some items was necessary, Werling said, because many of Henry and Clara Ford's original belongings were auctioned off by the Ford Motor Co. in 1952, and the current owners either would not resell the items or asked too high a price.

WHILE RESTORING the 56-room Fair Lane mansion, Werling has collected quite a few tidbits about the lifestyle of the auto magnate and his wife.

Long before air conditioning became a household word, the Fords had it, but only in one cedar-lined room that stored Clara Ford's furs. A generator in the Power House also supplied compressed air that provided blow driers in their bathrooms.

On a nightstand next to Clara Ford's twin bed is a book titled "The Bedside Gardener's Book."

"She was so excited, she used to keep a garden catalog under her pillow in the spring, when the gardening was about to start," Werling said.

Also in store for the summer is a boat ride down the portion of the Rouge River that flows behind Fair Lane and construction of a small footbridge to lead from the main estate to the Power House.

On a table in Werling's office are several of a collection of 1,000 books that were recently donated to Fair Lane by the Edison Institute. They now are being cataloged and will be placed on shelves in a first-floor library.

THE BOOKS SHOW Ford's varied interests, from figuring out how to grow the most crops per acre to the art of ballroom dancing.

A hardback, 1932 edition of Readers Digest is flagged with a bookmark before an article titled, "Songs and Dances of Bygone Days," reflecting Ford's love of folk art.

Another book is titled "Allen's Commercial Organic Analysis," reportedly given to Ford by soybean researcher George Washington Carver.

One of Ford's favorites was "Fuel Economy and CO2 Recorders," which he used to help calculate automobile gas mileage for his cars, Werling said.

"There are a lot of things that reflect Ford and Clara," Werling said. "This is what historical renovation is all about."

Daisies are growing wild along the I-275 freeway through Canton Township.

Indoors or out, daisies offer country charm

Daisies are synonymous with old-fashioned country charm.

They're in bloom now in meadows and along rural roads, as well as in the median strips of super highways and in vacant city lots.

Wherever they are, these perky white flowers with the yellow centers are as fresh and appealing as a summer morning.

The very name, daisy, evokes nostalgia. It comes from an old Anglo-Saxon word meaning "day's eye," and refers to the resemblance of a daisy to the golden sun surrounded by gleaming rays.

This flower is also called ox-eye daisy, field daisy, white-weed and marguerite. Other names by which it's known include dog daisy, bull daisy, butter daisy, dutch morgan and poverty weed.

Botanically, it is Chrysanthemum leucanthemum, and it is, indeed, a close relative to the showy autumn mums.

Daisies, which are among the most beloved wildflowers, seem as American as apple pie, but they're not natives at all. They may have originated in Asia, but they have been long established in Europe and from there found their way to America.

Betty Frankel

ONE AUTHORITY says they were brought to this country in the 18th Century, but in her book, "Green Immigrants," Claire Shaver Haughton writes, "There were no daisies in America when the Puritans unpacked their sparse furnishings in Massachusetts, but when they threw out their packing straw they unknowingly planted this gay and best-loved wildflower in our summer fields."

Daisies are regarded by farmers as pernicious weeds, but they make charming bouquets and the flowers last well when cut.

Despite their beauty, wild daisies seldom are grown in gardens, and there are no horticultural varieties, perhaps because the plants look a little lank and weedy or perhaps because they are so very prolific.

Gardeners who want to include the day's eye in their gardens generally turn to relatives of the common daisy, especially to shasta daisies, (Chrysanthemum maximum), but also to painted daisies (Chrysanthemum coccineum), marguerites (Chrysanthemum frutescens) or other members of the family.

Shasta daisies offer all the charm of their country cousins, forming robust clumps of glossy leaves with numerous flowers on long stems. The original garden forms of shasta daisies were developed by the famous horticulturist Luther Burbank by hybridizing the wild ox-eye daisy and other types. He named them for Mt. Shasta, a volcanic peak in northern California near where he lived.

A SINGLE CLUMP of shasta daisies can make a charming focal point in a small garden or by a back door. They are unsurpassed in a mixed perennial border where the snowy blooms serve as a lovely foil for the bright hues of lilies, daylilies, delphinium and other summer flowers. Also, they make excellent long-lasting cut flowers.

Shasta daisies are easy to grow. They need a sunny location and grow best in rich, moist, well-drained soil. If soil is poor, work in compost or well-rotted manure before planting. Space plants about one foot apart. You can buy plants or you can start your own from seeds.

Plants should be dug up and divided every year or two to keep the clumps compact and free-blooming. This is best done in spring. The extra plants produced by division can be used to increase your supply or to provide plants for friends.

Alaska is an older variety that is still one of the most popular. It is hardy and robust, producing an abundance of blooms on plants that grow about 2½ feet high. The flowers are about three inches in diameter, and are like giant versions of the common wild daisies.

Majestic, another good variety, has even larger flowers that are four inches in diameter. These plants grow about two feet high.

A CONTRAST to Majestic's size is the small charmer Little Miss Muffett. This dwarf variety grows into a compact foot-high tuft laden with good-sized daisy blooms. This variety makes an excellent front for a border.

The variety Thomas Killin is spectacular with six-inch, semidouble flowers.

Wirral Pride has a puffy center of shaggy white petals rather than the typical flat yellow disc. Plants are bushy and grow to two feet high.

Aglaya has frilly flowers with a yellow disc peeking out from the center of long white fringed petals.

Cobham Gold has creamy yellow flowers with a deeper yellow crested center.

Painted daisies, natives of Persia, are noted for their brilliant red or pink flowers, but there are also forms with gleaming white petals surrounding a yellow disc. These flowers have finely divided fern-like foliage and are not as robust as shasta daisies. They bloom early in the season.

Marguerites, or Paris daisies, are the daisies sold by florists. They are tender plants generally grown in greenhouses, but they can be grown in the garden if they are treated as annuals. They're not easy to find, and gardeners who grow them generally pot up plants to grow indoors in winter to maintain their stock.

A.J.'s Pizza serves up preaching with the pepperoni

By JON PEPPER
Free Press Staff Writer

There are stores that sell dirt, scrap and everything in between along North Telegraph Road in Flat Rock.

And when the dirt buyers, scrap peddlers and other Flat Rockians are hungry, they can take their pick from among the customary cluster of red-and-yellow fast-food outlets that signal the outskirts of a modern American town.

There is Wendy's, McDonald's, Kentucky Fried Chicken, Taco Bell and Burger King. With Little Caesar's, Pizza Hut, Pizza Palace, Rosie's Pizza & Pub and more, there are enough pizzerias to flood the Huron River valley with tomato sauce.

AND THEN there is A.J.'s Heavenly Pizza No. 2.

Buy one, get one FREE!
Jesus is Lord!

It says so right in the window.

Ignazio (Iggy) Abbulone, 24, is the "A" in A.J., and a man who draws his life in thirds: the first 11 years, which he spent in his native Sicily; the second 10 years, which he passed in Wyandotte; and the last three years he has lived in born-again Christian bliss.

"A lot of Christians stop by because they like the sign," Abbulone says.

Ah, yes. The sign.

WHILE OTHER fast-food restaurants on the strip have signs that feature Mexican bells, Kentucky colonels and cartoon drawings of Roman emperors, A.J.'s distinction is a 10-foot-high cross painted on a cinder block wall adjoining the gravel parking lot. And next to it, in enormous block letters: "JESUS died for you."

The sign sometimes brings problems.

"People will call and say, 'Can I speak to God?' or 'Is Jesus there?'" Abbulone says. "I knew ahead of time people would give us a hard time. But they're not going to get away with it. They are messing with God's children. I just pray for them that they will get their hearts straight with the Lord."

Abbulone and John Hill, the "J" half of the partnership, who runs the other store, in Tiffin, Ohio, both attended Wyandotte High School and worked at pizzerias before setting up their own shops. Abbulone says the

"We wanted to use our talents for the Lord, and pizzas were all we knew how to do. We want to reach people for Jesus."

— Ignazio (Iggy) Abbulone

pizza business is the only way they knew "how to do the Lord's work" and that pepperoni is secondary to preaching.

"We wanted to use our talents for the Lord, and pizzas were all we knew how to do," he says. "We want to reach people for Jesus. That's the whole objective here and nothing else."

EACH CUSTOMER gets a pamphlet and a menu stapled to the pizza box. The pamphlet is sort of a thank-you note to Jesus: "First of all for dying on the cross for our sins and also for the privilege of being his servants in the community."

Inside are seven easy steps on "how to miss hell and be sure heaven is your home."

The menu is a slice more conventional, offering pizza, chicken, fish and shrimp — and "God's Plan for Mankind" listed beneath the selection of side orders.

Abbulone likes his six employees to wear white, like the saints do in the painting, called "The Rapture," displayed in his lobby.

It portrays the second coming of Christ on a cloud above a major city, while cars crash on the freeway and airplanes plow into skyscrapers. Saints rise from the wreckage and from the Peaceful View Cemetery and move on to heaven. As for the other casualties, Abbulone says, well . . .

"I realized there was something wrong in my life," he says. "I kept sinning all the time. The Bible says you must be born again. I realized God had forgiven me for all my sins. Now I'm sure I'm going to heaven when I die."

SO ARE 20 other people who have been born again in the lobby, where the pop machine is painted over with a prophecy from Ezekiel in the place above the buttons where most machines say "Pepsi" or "Coke."

"Oh, we get excited!" Abbulone says, his blue eyes twinkling. "The angels rejoice. We get very happy. It's the best thing that could happen to anybody."

Mike (Twinkie) Letwinski, who stops in to say hello, will vouch for that.

"Amen," he says.

Abbulone only knew one word of English — hello — when he arrived in the U.S. some 14 years ago. Now, if he gets his way, lots of folks will be saying hello to Heavenly Pizza.

"I'd like to have A.J.'s pizza all through downriver, Michigan," he says. "If it's God's way, we will."

After all, he says, business is pretty good. "People say if you make it through the first year, that's the hardest," he says. "We're two years along already."

And working on eternity.

The spiritual side of therapy

By MONA GRIGG
Free Press Special Writer

Dr. David Hurst, the pastor-counselor-director of the Dearborn Pastoral Counseling and Consultation Service, is giving directions over the telephone to a would-be visitor:

"We're in the northwest wing of the Cherry Hill Presbyterian Church — Telegraph and Cherry Hill. There's a sign on the outside door; you'll see it. No, wait a minute — the sign blew down during that last big storm. Did they put it back up? Let me go look."

"No need," the caller says, "I'll find you. Don't worry."

The sign is, as the pastor suspected, still down, but the visitor does, indeed, find Hurst's small, spare office.

The day is hot and muggy but Hurst, in shirtsleeves, appears cool and crisp.

Even his conversation is cool and crisp.

"WHAT KIND of counseling do you do here at the center?" he is asked.

"Primarily, we do family counseling and stress therapy," he answers.

"But what makes you different from other counseling services?"

"We are a mental health facility, like the others, but the difference is that we intentionally take a person's spiritual concerns and values seriously, whether they be religious or philosophical in nature."

He pauses, as his 10 years of counseling experience tell him he isn't getting through.

"There are those people who, because of their religious or spiritual beliefs, find secular counseling lacking. Possibly they've run into counselors who are often indifferent or even hostile to the spiritual aspects of mental health healing — and we may be just what they're looking for," he says.

THE NEXT QUESTION: "When you say their values could be philosophic, does that mean they don't have to be Christians?"

Hurst rears up slightly in his chair and his tone, for the first time, becomes animated. "Well, now you've hit on a sore subject," he says, as he pulls out a brochure advertising the service and points to the words, "A Christian perspective . . ."

"That term disturbs me quite a bit," he says, not sounding terribly disturbed. "We want it known that the center is open to non-Christians as well. We're certainly not here to impose our beliefs on anyone."

But aren't his beliefs what caused him to set up a center such as this in the first place? Didn't he, an ordained United Methodist minister, work for and receive a master's degree in pastoral counseling so that he could counsel church members?

Hurst almost laughs. "They don't have to be church members. This is an outreach effort, available to anyone. Everyone believes in some kind of higher being — or is at least inspired by something. If it's not specifically religious, it may be something philosophic — something beyond the person: the beauty of nature, the vastness of the universe, the wonder of it all.

"We try to focus on what it is outside themselves that they can relate to and, at the same time, have a sense of belonging — or not. We look at those things — or the lack of — to find the source of their depression, or anxiety, or hostility."

There is a pause, and only the sound and motion of a fan disturbs the air as Hurst looks through and beyond the visitor, collecting his thoughts.

"There's another side to this, too," he says. "Sometimes a person's very religion gets in the way. They see God as a punitive, angry God, and it demeans their image of themselves. They cannot live up to what they think God wants. It takes a lot of hard work to get them to see Him as a loving God."

AT LENGTH, the conversation turns to Hurst himself, a subject he clearly is not interested in discussing.

A flotilla of floats, and he's admiral

By JON PEPPER
Free Press Staff Writer

The competition for $8,530 in prize money for best entries in Wyandotte's July 4 Grand Parade promises to be hotly contested.

By the time nine judges from the All-American Judges Association of Michigan confer at Yack Arena to cast their ballots, they will have seen legions of legionnaires, a flotilla of floats and enough batons to build a bridge over Biddle Avenue.

Dawn's Little Darlings, come on down! Indian City Golden Arrows Demonstration Team, come on down!

Snickelfritz, Dazy Jo and the 1965 Mustang convertible, come on down!

When it comes to Independence Day parades, Wyandotte claims the best and biggest in the state, with more than 5,000 participants.

"Without doubt, it's the biggest in Michigan, Ohio and Illinois," says John Kudrak, parade secretary for 22 years. "Milwaukee might have a bigger one, but other than that, I don't know."

KUDRAK, 64, has kept track of the parade entries since February. A retired forklift driver at Wyandotte Chemical, Kudrak keeps two copy machines, an addressograph, an electric typewriter, a manual typewriter and two dozen clipboards in the basement office he calls "the dungeon."

It's his job to keep the parade committee

John Kudrak, secretary for Wyandotte's parade.

Free Press/KAMUDA

apprised of where the Phyllis Diller impersonator will line up vis-a-vis the Trenton Twirlers, and where the Senior Miss Poppy Queen will ride in relation to Cub Scouts Pack 1776.

He also has to juggle various special requests written on the entry forms. For instance, Dawn's Little Darlings wish to be situated near a band because "our girls dance better to a beat."

Kudrak is a typing whiz who was company clerk in the Army, editor of his union's newspaper, and has served 32 years as adjutant to VFW Post 1136. And though he hasn't missed a meeting in all his years as parade secretary, he says he gets lost in the shuffle when all the plaudits are passed out.

"Politicians take all the credit," he says. "The peons do all the work."

So what's in it for John Kudrak?

"I enjoy the applause of the crowd," he says. "Then I know I did something good for Wyandotte and for VFW."

KUDRAK SAYS that of all the entries — from the Polish Eagles to the Senior Ladies Drill Team — he likes the kids from the Wyandotte playgrounds the best.

"Parades are for kids," he says. "We cater to kids. If we can't make them happy when they participate, then I think we got a lost cause."

From the Wyandotte Department of Public Works yard, the BASF Corp. parking lot, and side streets along the way, paraders will begin to converge on Biddle Avenue at 10 a.m. It starts with the senior color guard from Selfridge Air National Guard Base and ends with hot dogs and ice cream for all the parade workers at various veterans halls around the city.

Three cable companies will telecast the 47th Wyandotte parade to downriver residents. The commentators will use crib sheets compiled by John Kudrak to provide incidental information about the participants.

For instance, the Military Order of Cooties, entry No. 153, has a hospital visitation and entertainment program and a slogan that says, "Keep them smiling in beds of white."

The Cooties might march themselves right into the prize money in the comic category, one of 17 categories in which first, second and third place awards are given.

But it could be tight. With Snickelfritz, Dazy Jo and their 1965 Mustang convertible, the Phyllis Diller Float and Clowns of America Alley No. 144, the comic category is loaded.
